NOTE

Illustrative sentences and phrases in this dictionary, in both English and Chinese, are chosen to demonstrate as clearly as possible the use of the vocabularies of the two languages. Such sentences do not in any case constitute suggestions, or statements of opinion or viewpoint, of either the personnel who prepared the dictionary or of the War Department.

PART I

INTRODUCTION

A. GENERAL

This dictionary of the Chinese National Language (gwó-'ywǔ) is designed primarily for the use of speakers of English who have acquired some familiarity with spoken Chinese but who are not yet completely fluent in that language, and especially for those in that category who are in contact with native speakers of Chinese. The degree of familiarity assumed is that attainable, for example, by a careful study of at least the first twelve Units of Spoken Chinese, Basic Course (EM 506, 507) (obviously mastery of the entire course, thirty Units, is even better). At about this point the learner is able to paraphrase many things which he cannot yet express precisely as a native speaker would; but by directing such paraphrases towards a native speaker he can often elicit the normal Chinese expression, and thereby add it to his vocabulary. However, in this process there are difficulties and pitfalls; sometimes it is difficult to achieve understanding through paraphrase, and sometimes one thinks that understanding has been achieved when actually the information acquired is not the information wanted. It is as an aid in avoiding such pitfalls and difficulties that the present work should have its best use.

Although this dictionary is fairly large, there are relatively few lexical items treated in it: about 2,500 on the English-Chinese side, and about twice that number on the other side. The treatment accorded these items, however, is often fairly exhaustive. It is not possible, in the correlation of English and Chinese, to be both concise and accurate. For example, the English word "break" can be, and is, used in a large variety of situations; in Chinese one has to take account of a great many details in each particular situation in order to use the Chinese expression that a native speaker would use. Thus, "to break" as of a long slender brittle thing is one term, "to break" as of a box or other hollow object is another, "to break" as of a pane of glass is another; "to break" simply into two or a small number of fragments is one, "to break" into tiny pieces is another; "to break" something in any one of these ways by striking it calls for a special expression, "to break" something by dropping it calls for another; and so on. To list the English word "break" and give as its equivalent any one of these Chinese expressions, or even any relatively small handful of them, would be like equating English "thing" and the Chinese word which means "box"; a box is a thing, but so are a large number of entities which are not boxes.

As a result, consulting this work will generally call for a certain amount of diligence and study; this requirement will be greater for initial consultations than for subsequent ones, when the pattern has been learned. In the process of finding out about some single item, it will often happen that other information is picked up incidentally. The acceptance of such incidentally acquired information will aid in achieving the goal: fluency in the language.

Since the number of English words treated is so small, it will often happen that a particular word is not found. If the word not found is the name of a concrete object, then eliciting the desired information directly from a native speaker is relatively easy. Otherwise, there are usually alternative ways of expressing the idea in English, and one or more of these alternative ways should be looked for.

In general, simple colloquial ways of saying things should be searched for rather than rare or literary ways. Thus, look for "worn out" or "worn down" rather than "dilapidated"; for "house" or "home" rather than "residence"; "die" rather than "decease"; "cooking" rather than "cuisine"; and so on.

Do not expect Chinese words ever to have quite the same ranges of meaning as English words. The case of "break", cited above, is extreme; but there is almost always some difference. "Accident" is a noun in English; Chinese sentences about the same thing use a verbal expression. There is no word at all equivalent to our "berry"; the Chinese have terms for specific berries, a general word for "fruit", and an even more general word for "fruits-and-nuts", but no term which covers just berries and nothing else. Such differences run all through the vocabulary. As much as possible, learn in terms of the ranges of meaning of Chinese words without worrying about what the English equivalents would be—do this even when consulting the English-Chinese side. As much as possible, learn words in terms of the sample sentences given on both sides, or in simple cases make up sentences for yourself; for anything less than a sentence is an artificial, though convenient, abstraction from what is involved when we speak.

The remainder of this introduction is an integral part of the dictionary, and should be consulted whenever necessary. The writing system used throughout the dictionary is explained in Section B; certain regional variations in pronunciation to which the user may have to accustom his ear are mentioned in Section C; important changes of sound are dealt with in Section D; the structure of Chinese sentences is treated in Section E, which also serves as an essential aid in understanding entries on the Chinese-English side; characters are dealt with briefly in Section F.

B. SOUNDS

1. Symbols Used

In this dictionary the sounds of Chinese are written with the following letters and other symbols:

Representing consonant sounds: b ch d dz f g h j k l m n ng p r s sh t ts w y yw.

Representing vowel sounds: a e o i u r z.

Representing tones: accent marks put over a letter, as follows: first tone ā, second tone á, third tone ǎ, fourth tone à.

Representing stress (or loudness or prominence): a raised tick (') placed before a syllable.

Representing point of syllable division: a hyphen (-) or a space between syllables.

Commas (,), periods (.), question marks (?), and exclamation marks (!) are used as in English.

No capital letters are used.

In the interest of economy, some of the above letters or groups of letters, or other symbols, are used to represent more than one sound, but only when (1) the sounds are similar and (2) they occur only in mutually exclusive environments, so that the conditions under which a single symbol represents one or another sound can be clearly defined.

Except for minor details, this system is the same as that used in Spoken Chinese, Basic Course (EM 506, 507). This is only one of many possible systems, and is not necessarily the best for all purposes; but as a help in learning Chinese it has proved somewhat more effective than the Wade-Giles system, heretofore very widely in use. Because of the widespread use of the latter system, each syllable which differs in Wade-Giles transcription from the present system is listed in proper alphabetical order in the Chinese-English side of the dictionary with a cross reference to the equivalent transcription in the present system.

2. Consonants at the Beginning of a Syllable

In the following, the first column lists a symbol, the second column the conditions under which that symbol represents the sound described in the third column, and the fourth column gives examples. The order is as follows: f l m n r s w y p t k b d g ts dz ch j sh h ng yw; this order is used because it puts the most familiar sounds first and groups together those which represent similar difficulties.

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
f	everywhere.	as in English fan.	fàn "food".
l	everywhere.	as in English law.	lā "to pull".
m	everywhere.	as in English man.	màn "slow".
n	everywhere.	as in English Nan.	nán "difficult".
r	everywhere.	as in English run.	rén "person".
(There is some variation in the pronunciation of this sound among Chinese; but any variety of English initial r except a Scotch "burr" or "trill" sounds perfectly acceptable to Chinese ears.)
s	everywhere.	as in English sand.	sān "three".
w	everywhere.	as in English way.	wèy "because of".
y	everywhere.	as in English yeah.	yě "also".
(But note that yw is treated as a special symbol.)
p	everywhere.	as in English pin, but with a stronger puff of breath.	pàw "cannon".

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
t	everywhere.	as in English tin, but with a stronger puff of breath.	tàw "suit of".
k	everywhere.	as in English kin, but with a stronger puff of breath.	kàw "to rely on".

(The puff of breath or "aspiration" which follows the first consonant of the English words pin, tin, kin, can be tested by holding a small slip of very light-weight paper before the lips as the words are spoken. The paper will flutter slightly just as the first consonant ends. For the Chinese sounds written with the same letters, the paper should flutter considerably more.)

b	everywhere.	as in English bin, but without voicing; or as English p in pin, but without any puff of breath.	bàw "newspaper".
d	everywhere.	as in English din, but without voicing; or as English t in tin, but without any puff of breath.	dàw "to".
g	everywhere.	as in English get, but without voicing; or as English k in kin, but without any puff of breath.	gàw "report".

(There are three ways to acquire these sounds: (1) Practice with the slip of paper as suggested above, and try to say the words so that the paper does not flutter at all. (2) Hold your hands over your ears and say the words bin, din, get; you will hear a buzz that begins with the initial consonant and continues throughout in the case of bin and din, until the final -t in the case of get. Then try to say the words so that the buzz does not begin until after the initial consonant. (3) Say the words spin, stick, skin, with the slip of paper, and notice that it does not flutter. Take the initial s- away and try to say the p, t, and k in just the same way, without causing the paper to flutter.)

ts	everywhere.	like the ts h of English it's hot with the initial i left off.	tsăw "grass".
dz	everywhere.	like the ts of English hats off with the initial ha left off.	dzăw "early".

(Pretend you're a phonograph record, with the expressions it's hot and hats off recorded on it; put the needle down just past the place where the i of it's hot or the ha of hat's off is recorded. The difference between ts and dz is comparable to the difference between p and b, t and d, or k and g as described earlier.)

ch	(1) before i, y, or yw.	much as in English cheat, but with the tip of the tongue held down behind the lower front teeth.	chì "air". chyán "money".
	(2) elsewhere.	a cross between true and choose—as though we said chrue instead of true.	chū "exit". chá "tea".
j	(1) before i, y, or yw.	like Chinese ch in the same conditions, except with no puff of breath.	jì "remember". jyāw "teach".
	(2) elsewhere.	like Chinese ch in the same conditions, except with no puff of breath.	jū "pig". já "brake".

(The most important thing in pronouncing correctly ch and j not before i, y, or yw, is to draw the tip of the tongue back and up to the roof of the mouth; avoid scrupulously making a sound like the English ch in chase or chair, or j in jack or jump, which are made with the tongue much farther forward in the mouth.)

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
sh	(1) before i, y, or yw.	much as in English sheet, but with the tip of the tongue held down behind the lower front teeth.	shī "west". shyǎw "small".
	(2) elsewhere.	a cross between the sh of shoe and the shr of shrew, with the tongue drawn well back and up.	shū "book". shǎw "few".
h	everywhere.	either like the English h in hand or with friction at the back of the mouth, as in German ach.	hǎw "OK". hú "lake".

(Most speakers of Chinese vary between these two; either is acceptable, but to use always the English h sound may make your pronunciation occasionally unpleasant to Chinese ears.)

ng	everywhere (occurs only when the preceding syllable ends in ng).	like the ng of singer (not like the ng of finger!)	bù-'shíng-nga! "It won't do!"

(Be particularly careful with this sound if you find that you pronounce the English words singer and finger alike; in this case you may have the right sound in both words, or the wrong sound in both.)

yw	everywhere.	the sounds of y as in yes and w as in won't pronounced at the same time.	ywè "month".

(The tongue is in the position for y, but the lips are rounded as for w. Sometimes the y-part of the sound starts just slightly before the lips are rounded, but often the two are simultaneous.)

3. Groups of Consonants at the Beginning of a Syllable

Groups of consonants at the beginning of a syllable consist of one of the consonants described above other than y, w, or yw, followed by y, w, or yw. Each consonant of the group then represents the same sound that it stands for when not in such a group. Examples: fwó "Buddha"; lyǎn "face"; myàn "surface"; nwǎn "warm"; swàn "calculate"; pwò "to break"; tyān "day"; dwèn "pause"; chyán "money"; chwán "boat"; chywán "all"; shywé "to learn".

4. Consonants at the End of a Syllable

The following consonants and groups of consonants occur at the ends of syllables: m, n, ng, r, w, y, wr, ngr.

m	everywhere.	like English m in ham.	wǒm "we". nǐm "you". tām "they".
n	(1) except as mentioned under (2).	like English n in can.	wén "smell". tán "converse".
	(2) when the next syllable begins with y.	the tongue does not quite reach the roof of the mouth, and the preceding vowel is slightly nasalized.	'tán-yi-tán "converse a bit".

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
ng	everywhere.	like English ng in sing or singer (not like the ng in finger!)	táng "candy, sugar". háng "trade". húng "red".

(As with ng at the beginning of a syllable, be particularly careful if you find that you pronounce the ng of singer and finger alike, because in that case the one sound you use may be right or it may be wrong.)

r	everywhere.	like the r in bar, fur.	wár "to play". fèr "portion of".

(In many varieties of English, r's after a vowel are not pronounced. Whatever variety of English you speak, be sure to pronounce the r in Chinese; but don't trill or roll it; make an English r-sound, not a French or German r-sound.)

w	everywhere.	like English w in how, wow, know.	năw "brains". gĕw "dog".

(In English writing aw is used not for an a-sound followed by the w-sound—except in the speech of some people from the southern part of the United States. But Chinese aw consists of a as described in subsection 5 below followed by w as described here.)

y	everywhere.	like English y in they.	năy "milk". gĕy "give".

(Similarly, English ay doesn't stand for an a-sound plus the y-sound, but Chinese ay has the Chinese a as described in subsection 5 followed by y as described here.)

wr	everywhere.	w and r as described above, but sometimes pronounced at the same time instead of one after the other, or sometimes with the r-sound first.	gĕwr "small dog".

(Producing both sounds at once is possible, since the w consists of rounding the lips, r consists of curling the tongue back—different parts of the speech apparatus are used.)

ngr	everywhere.	the back of the tongue does not reach the roof of the mouth for the ng; the vowel is strongly nasalized; r as described above.	héngr "horizontal stroke".

5. Vowels

The vowels (and two vowel groups) are a, e, o, ee, oe, i, u, r, z. Only a and e begin a syllable; the others always have a consonant before them. a is made with the lower jaw well down and the mouth wide open; e, ee, o, and oe are made with the lower jaw partly down and the mouth partly open; i, u, r, and z are made with the lower jaw not down at all, and the lips close together.

a	(1) except as detailed below.	like the English a of father or ma.	mă "horse". hăw "OK". hăy "seas".
	(2) between y and n.	like the English a of hand.	yān "smoke". dyàn "electricity".
	(3) between yw and n.	like the English a of bat, but variable; some speakers make it like (1), some like (2).	ywàn "court". chywán "altogether".
	(4) between w and ng.	like (1) or like the English o of long.	hwāng "nervous".

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
e	(1) except as specified below.	about like English u in but or huh.	hē "to drink". chē "cart". hěn "very".
	(When final in the syllable, this sound often begins with the back of the tongue drawn back and up towards the roof of the mouth, like the oo of book without the lips rounded; but it then glides from this to the sound described above.)
	(2) after y or yw, final in the syllable.	like the English e of met or eah or yeah.	yě "also". ywè "month".
	(3) between w and y or vice versa; or between w and n.	very short, and often nearer the oo of book or the i of pick, depending on whether it is followed by w or by y.	dwèy "right". dyēw "lose". dwèn "pause". wèy "because of". yèw "again".
	(4) before w and not after y.	as in (1) or a bit farther back.	gěw "dog".
ee	everywhere.	the first e is as above, depending on the preceding sound; the second as (1) above.	héer "box".
o	everywhere.	about like the English aw of law.	wǒ "I". wǒm "we".
oe	everywhere.	o gliding into the first variety of e described above.	wōer "nest".
i	(1) final in the syllable.	like the English ee of see.	mǐ "rice grain".
	(2) not final in the syllable.	like the English i of pin.	mín "people".
	(Consonants before i are often pronounced with a little y-glide after them, as though one said myín instead of mín.)
u	(1) final and not after yw.	like the English oo of moon.	wǔ "five". shū "book".
	(2) followed by a consonant and not after yw.	like the English oo of book.	húng "red".
	(3) after yw.	like the oo of moon and the ee of see pronounced simultaneously.	ywǔ "rain". ywùn "to ship".
	(The tongue is in the ee-position, and the lips are rounded as for oo. This is the same position as described already for the consonant sound written yw.)
z	everywhere.	like the oo of look pronounced without rounding the lips; the throat is tense and the back of the tongue is held down tightly.	dz̀ "word". tsz̀ "jab". sz̀ "four".
	(This sound occurs only after the consonants dz, ts, and s. With the consonant dz and the vowel z, only one z is written.)
r	everywhere.	like the middle-western American English ir of shirt or ur of hurt, fur.	r̀ "sun". chr̄ "to eat". jŕ "straight". shr̀ "is".
	(This sound occurs only after the consonants r, ch, j, and sh. With the consonant r and the vowel r, only one r is written.)

6. Tones

A syllable uttered in isolation has one of four tonal contours or tones. In longer expressions, the individual syllables may have one of a larger number of contours, all related to that one of just four which the same syllable has in isolation; or they may have no definite tonal contour at all. These last are called toneless syllables, and are written without any tone mark.

The distinctiveness of the tonal contours described below depends on the loudness or prominence of the syllable in question: more distinct when louder, less distinct when softer.

Symbol	Conditions	Description	Examples
¯ (ā)	everywhere.	high, level, sometimes cut off sharply at the end.	gāw "high". tsā "to scrape".
´ (á)	everywhere.	relatively high, rising, with increasing loudness; often cut off sharply at end.	rén "person". báw "thin". ná "take". tsúng "from".
ˇ (ǎ)	(1) stressed at end of a phrase (before pause).	low in pitch, rising at the end, and gradually less loud.	mǎ "horse". kǔ "bitter". yěw "there is". hǎw "OK".
	(2) before another syllable with third tone (ˇ).	mid-low, rising, sometimes not distinguishable from second tone (´).	wǒ 'yěw "I have". hǎy-'kěw "seaport". (the first syllables in each case).
	(3) otherwise.	low, with no rise.	yěw-'rén "there are people". mǎ-'chē "horse cart".
` (à)	(1) stressed.	falling from high to mid-low or low.	rè "hot". hàw "number".
	(2) unstressed.	falling, but often only slightly, and from whatever level is reached by the preceding syllable; if none, from mid-high.	'shàng-shyàw "colonel". kàn-bu-'jyàn "can't see".
(no symbol)	everywhere.	short, middle pitch.	tā-de "his". rén-de "people's". wǒ-de "mine". hwày-de "bad ones". de-hwà "in case".

7. Syllables and Stress

Stress means the relative degree of loudness or prominence of syllables when they are joined together. In the English sentence I saw her yesterday, saw and yes- are louder than the other syllables. The equivalent feature of Chinese is here written with a raised tick (') at the beginning of a syllable: wǒ 'dzwó-tyan 'kàn-jyan ta-le. "I saw her yesterday."

Stress is important in Chinese, but in many cases it is variable. The word shàng-'shyàw "colonel" is literally "upper field-officer"; it is pronounced as indicated, with stress on the second part, normally, or when identifying a person as an "upper field-officer" rather than as an "upper general-officer" (shàng-'jyàng) or "upper company-officer" (shàng-'wèy); but it is pronounced as 'shàng-shyàw when one identifies a person as a colonel rather than as a "middle field-officer" ('jūng-shyàw "lieutenant colonel") or "lower field-officer" ('shàw-shyàw "major").

Generally speaking, the syllables of Chinese are kept quite distinct even in rapid speech. But in some cases two successive syllables are coalesced: 'shém-me "what?" is most often pronounced 'shéme or even shém. When such coalescence takes place, the resulting unit, even if it contains two vowels separated by a consonant as in the case of shéme, is a single syllable-like unit in that it bears a single tone the contour of which is distributed throughout, and is, as a whole, stressed or unstressed. Other examples: 'dzán-men "we" is usually dzám; 'wǒ-men, 'nǐ-men, 'tā-men "we, you, they" are very often wǒm, nǐm, tām; 'jè-me "thus" is more often 'jème, jèm, or dzèm; 'jè-li "here" is in Peiping and vicinity usually jèr (with a change of l to r); 'jè-yī "this one" is often, or usually, jèy—so commonly that jèy has come to be used instead of jè in such forms as 'jèy-yī "this one", jèy-'lyǎng-ge "these two", and so on.

C. REGIONAL DIFFERENCES

The present dictionary operates in terms of the so-called "Chinese National Language" (gwó-'ywǔ), and in terms of the speech of Peiping, on which the National Language is primarily based. This variety of Chinese is mutually intelligible with all the dialects spoken in the northwest, northeast, and southwest, but in the southeastern provinces along the seacoast, up as far as Shanghai, only Chinese who have specially studied the National Language understand and speak it, their own dialects being widely divergent from those of the balance of the country and from each other. The dialect of Canton, for example, that of Shanghai, and that of Peiping differ from one another as greatly as do the German of Berlin, the Dutch of The Hague, and the English of London.

Although the dialect differences among the 300,000,000 Chinese in the northwest, northeast, and southwest are not great enough to cause native speakers thereof any serious trouble in communicating with one another, the foreigner who learns one particular dialect as an adult has a considerably more difficult time attuning his ears to the others. Since the necessity for doing so may frequently arise, the present section lists some of the chief differences in pronunciation that will be found.

1. The element -r (see entry -r in Chinese-English side and Section D of the Introduction) is fairly widespread (e.g., Peiping, Nanking, Chungking, Chengtu); in Hangchow the same element is found but with different pronunciation (-l instead of -r); in Hueichou the equivalent element is -n; in some places it is -z. But it is not always added to the same elements: the verb wár "to play", for example, is restricted pretty much to Peiping. Where -r or an equivalent is not used so often, nouns which in Peiping end in -r will often (but not always) add -dz—itself found in Peiping as an alternate for -r as well as in nouns with which -r is not used.

2. The sounds written in this dictionary by ch, j, and sh not before i, y, or yw are, in the northeastern provinces and in some parts of Hupeh, Hunan, and Szechwan, not kept distinct from ts, dz, and s in the same position. Thus sǎw "to sweep" and shǎw "small" will in those places both be pronounced as sǎw; sż "four" and shì "is, are" will both be sż. Chinese from some parts of the southeast whose native dialect is completely mutually unintelligible with gwó-'ywǔ often speak gwó-'ywǔ, as a language acquired in school or as adults, with this same feature.

3. In some areas ch, j, and sh before i, y, or yw are replaced completely by ts, dz, and s; in some areas (a few in the northwest) both sounds are found before i, y, and yw, the ch-j-sh series in some words, the ts-dz-s series in others.

4. In many areas final -n and -ng are pronounced without full contact of the tongue (tip or back) against the roof of the mouth, and with nasalization of the preceding vowel. In some areas -an is so pronounced but -ang keeps the -ng as a distinct sound; in some areas both of these have a nasal vowel and no nasal consonant, the nasal vowels having, however, different tongue positions. In some areas even the nasalization is gone, so that -an rhymes completely with -a. No data are at present available for a full statement.

5. The syllables ywe, jywe, chywe, shywe, nywe, lywe (with any tone) are represented in Hupeh, Hunan, Yünnan, Szechwan, and a few other places by two series of syllables: that just listed, and a series yo, jyo, chyo, shyo, nyo, lyo (the letters here representing the individual sounds ascribed to them in Section B). Roughly four-fifths of the elements which in Peiping have the pronunciations first listed fall into the second series in the areas where both series are found.

6. In some districts of Hupeh, Hunan, and Szechwan, and along the lower Yangtze, syllable-initial n- and l- are confused, so that such words as nán "difficult" and lán "basket" would both begin indifferently with n- or with l-.

7. In most of Szechwan, hu is replaced by fu; in some of Szechwan and some districts of Hupeh and Hunan there is not only this replacement but also the replacement of any syllable-initial hw- by f-: thus fa instead of hwa, fey instead of hwey, and so on.

8. Along the Yangtze, initial l- and r- are in some districts confused; this confusion is found occasionally elsewhere, but is not common.

9. In Hupeh, Hunan, and Szechwan, and in small areas elsewhere, ng is usually prefixed to words which in Peiping begin with a or e: ngè instead of è "to be hungry."

10. In some districts of Honan, Hupeh, and Hunan, and in southern Szechwan along the Yangtze valley, there is a fifth tone distinct from the four tones of Peiping. The fifth tone has different characteristics in different places: in Nanking it is high and short, cut off abruptly when final in the phrase. Syllables which in these dialects have the fifth tone are merged variously in other tone classes in dialects which have only four.

11. In Szechwan and elsewhere in the southwest there are four tones as in Peiping, but with quite different characteristics. The first tone is high and level as in Peiping; but the second is low and level; the third is high and falling; and the fourth is low and rising. With some exceptions, elements having the Peiping first tone in Peiping have the Szechwan first tone in Szechwan, and so on, so that it is essentially a matter of simple substitution, orally or aurally, to interpret something said in one tonal system in terms of the other.

D. CHANGES OF SOUND

1. Occasional Changes. Some elements in Chinese vary in pronunciation without any correlated change in meaning. The most frequent case of this is that of an element which in certain compounds or contexts loses its tone: bù-ˈhǎw "not good", with bù "not"; but ˈhǎw-bu-hǎw "is it good?" with bu toneless. Cases of this kind are properly indicated in the body of the dictionary and in the subsequent sections of the Introduction.

Some elements occur in all possible contexts with either of two tones, or even sometimes with any of three tones. When the alternate forms would be separated by considerable unrelated material in the Chinese-English side of the dictionary, both are given with a cross reference to the one under which information is given.

More rarely, elements vary freely in other respects than tone. Such cases are handled as in the case of free tone variations.

2. Regular Changes. The element -r or -er (see entry in form -er) differs from most constituent elements of expressions in Chinese in that it is joined onto the previous syllable as part of that same syllable, instead of constituting a syllable in itself. The merging of a syllable with suffixed -r or -er calls for certain systematic changes in the vowels and consonants of the original first syllable; the tone is not affected. The following table shows what changes are made:

Syllables ending in:	When adding -r become:	Example:
-a	-ar	hwā : hwār hwāer
-an	-ar	hwān : hwār
-ay	-ar	hwáy : hwár
-aw	-awr	hàw : hàwr
-ang	-angr	háng : hángr
-e	-er, -eer	gè : gèer or gèr hé : héer or hér

(Speakers differ in the latter usage. With the first and second tones the writing with two e's has generally been used; with the third and fourth tones the writing with one e has generally been used.)

-o	-oer, -or, -er	wō : wōer, wōr wò : wòr, wòer

(Speakers differ here also; all the writings have been used on occasion.)

-en	-er	gēn : gēr
-ey	-er	swèy : swèr
-ew	-ewr	gěw : gěwr
-eng	-engr	héng : héngr

E. FORMATION OF SENTENCES

GUIDE TO THE CHINESE–ENGLISH SIDE

1. General Comments: The Forms of Entries

The smallest meaningful elements which are put together to form sentences in Chinese (or any other language) are called morphemes.

Structure of Chinese Morphemes. Most morphemes in Chinese consist of a single syllable, and most syllables constitute a single morpheme: rén "person"; bīng "soldier"; shyǎw "small"; dà "large"; hěn "very, quite"; jwā "to grasp or scratch with the fingers". A few Chinese morphemes consist of less than a syllable: hwàr "picture" consists of hwà "to depict" plus -r (no precise meaning save that the form ending in it is not likely to be a verb). A few, on the other hand, consist of more than one syllable: ˈbwō-li "glass"; jī-lu-gā-ˈlár "in every nook and cranny."

Types of Morphemes. Some Chinese morphemes have a relatively independent status, being used on occasion as a whole sentence or as a major constituent of a sentence; all the morphemes cited above are examples. Others occur only in certain types of combinations with other elements. For example, jǎng "person in charge of through official or military appointment" is never used all alone, but is added freely to designations of governmental bodies or military units: páy-ˈjǎng "platoon leader" and the like. These morphemes are termed bound; the type mentioned earlier are termed free. The distinction is not sharp, but is very useful. Some bound morphemes are of sufficient importance to merit listing as separate entries in the body of the dictionary; they are there marked with an asterisk (*) to indicate their bondage.

Lexical Units. Some combinations of morphemes have meanings which are simply the sum of the meanings of the constituent elements, whether the latter be free or bound. páy-ˈjǎng "platoon leader" is an example. Other combinations are used conventionally, as wholes, with meanings which are more than simply the sum of the meanings of the parts: chī "to eat" and kǔ "bitter", but chī-ˈkǔ "to suffer".

Each morpheme, and each combination of morphemes with such specialized meaning, constitutes a lexical unit, in the sense of an expression which must be learned as a whole. The items given as entries on the Chinese-English side of this dictionary are lexical units in this sense.

Form of Entries. About each lexical unit there are two types of information which must be acquired: (1) its meaning (in terms of English) and (2) the ways in which it is used alone, or in combination with other lexical units, to form whole sentences.

Information of type (1) is given for each lexical unit where it is entered alphabetically.

Information of type (2) is given for each lexical unit where it is entered alphabetically, in those cases in which such information applies only to that specific lexical unit. There are, however, large numbers of lexical units which operate in closely similar ways in the formation of sentences, so that statements about this can be made once for all of them.

To make this possible, most entries in the Chinese-English side are followed by a code symbol, in the following fashion:

gūng-ˈmín (Npers) citizen.

The code symbol Npers refers the user to the appropriate subsection of Section 6 of this part of the Introduction, in which a series of statements which apply to all entries so coded are made. The code symbols themselves have been designed to be somewhat suggestive, as an aid to memory: thus the N in Npers suggests noun, and the pers suggests personal, so that the whole symbol suggests personal noun, a term used in the introductory section (and occasionally in entries) to refer to lexical units of this type. It has not been possible, however, to make the code symbol this obvious in all cases.

The expressions (not code symbols) "literary", "a bit literary", and "literary quotation", which will be found sprinkled among the entries, are explained in Section F of the Introduction.

The following sections consist first (Subsections 2–5) of general statements about the structure of Chinese sentences which cannot be allocated specifically to one or another code symbol, and then (Subsection 6) of an alphabetical listing of the code symbols with the relevant statements made for each.

2. Sentence Elements

A Chinese sentence consists of a nucleus, either standing alone or surrounded by one or more particles, nominal referents, adverbial modifiers, and linking elements. A whole sentence may itself participate in a larger sentence; for this see the discussion in Subsection 5, and that in Subsection 6 under the code symbols A (8, 9, and 10), H (2), and Vsent.

The nucleus may be nominal, adjectival, or verbal. For sentences with nominal nucleus see Subsection 3; for those with adjectival nucleus see the discussion under the code symbol A; for those with verbal nucleus see the discussion under the code symbols I, IN, RC, RC1, RC2, RC3, RC4, V, V2, VN1, VN2, VN3, Vpred, and Vsent.

Particles are given as entries and their use in sentences is described there; see particularly le, gwo, je, de, and, closely related, the adverbs bū and méy.

Nominal referents are non-nuclear nominal expressions standing in any of various relations to the nucleus and to each other. The formation of nominal expressions is dealt with under the code symbols Dem, Demord, M (and the various symbols beginning with M), N (and the various symbols beginning with N), Num, Preord, and Pron.

Nominal referents are either marked, meaning that they follow a coverb (K) which indicates their function in the sentence, or unmarked, which means that there is no such coverb and that the function in the sentence depends on position relative to the nuclear element and on what type of nuclear element is involved. A combination of coverb and nominal expression may also be said to function as an adverbial modifier in the sentence.

Nominal expressions are also either definite or indefinite in form. A Nunique is definite; any nominal expression consisting of, or beginning with, a Dem, Demord, or Pron is definite; all ordinal expressions (see Preord) are definite; all other nominal expressions are indefinite. With certain nuclei (I, RC1) the positions in which certain nominal referents may occur depends on their definiteness or indefiniteness.

Nominal referents which are in all cases unmarked, or which are only marked in some cases, include the following:

1. Actor (with A, I, RC1, RC2, RC3, V, V2, Vpred, or Vsent as nucleus) specifying the thing or person characterized, or the thing or person which performs the action indicated by the verb. Thus wǒ "I" is actor in the following sentences:

wǒ yěw yì-dyǎr-'è. "I'm a bit hungry."

wǒ méy-'dàw-gwo jūng-gwo. "I've never been to China."

2. Agent (with nuclear I, RC2, RC4) specifying a person (rarely a thing) which causes an action. In the following sentences wǒ and nǐ "you" are agents:

nǐ 'wèy-shéme méy-láy-'shìn? "How come you haven't written?" (literally "How come you haven't caused letters to come?") wǒ bǎ-'jǐ 'sž-chéng lyǎng-'bàr. "I tore the paper in two."

3. Undergoer (with nuclear I) specifying a person or thing which experiences, suffers, or undergoes the action of an actor. In the following sentence wǒ is undergoer:

wǒ 'lyéw-le hěn-dwō-de-'shyě. "I lost a lot of blood." (literally "I experienced a lot of blood flowing out.")

4. Goal (with RC2, RC4, V, V2) specifying an object (thing or person) towards which the action indicated by the nucleus of the sentence is directed, and which is altered in position or structure by that action. In the following sentence 'jàng-peng "tents" is goal:

'fēng bǎ 'jàng-peng gwā-'dǎw-le. "The wind blew the tents down."

'jàng-peng jyàw-'fēng gěy gwā-'dǎw-le. "The tents were blown down by the wind."

5. Percept (with RC2, V) specifying a person or thing towards which the action indicated by the nucleus of the sentence is directed, but which is not altered in position or structure by that action. In the following sentence tā "he" is percept:

wǒ háy méy-'kàn-jyan ta-ne. "I haven't seen him yet."

6. Recipient (V2 especially, RC4, and general; see under entry gěy) specifying a person (not a thing) who receives something or for whose benefit or detriment the action specified by the nucleus occurs. In the following sentence wǒ is recipient:

chǐng-ni bǎ nèy-bǎ-'fǔ-dz 'dì-gey wo. "Please pass that ax over to me."

7. Terminus (with RC3, RC4, V) specifying a time or place arrived at by an action, or a state resulting from an action. In the following sentences the nominal expressions at the ends of the sentences are termini:

nǐ 'shéme-shŕ-hew ké-yi 'dàw-jèr? "When can you get here?"

bǎ-'bǐng bāy-chéng lyǎng-'kwàr. "Break the cake into two pieces."

There are a few types of usually unmarked nominal referents for which no names have been devised; these are dealt with at relevant points in Subsection 6.

Adverbial modifiers include adverbs (H); adjectives used adverbially (A, paragraphs 11, 12); nominal expressions which specify places or times (see section entitled Time and Place Expressions below); and combinations of coverb (K) with following nominal expression.

Linking elements are conjunctions (J).

3. Sentences with Nominal Nuclei

A nominal sentence consists of two nominal expressions which are equated, or the equation between which is denied. The second nominal expression is the nucleus; the first is often left out and understood from context. The equating may be indicated by shì "is, are, am" before the nucleus, or by nothing at all; but if the identification is denied, the nucleus is always preceded by some marking verb form, often bú-shr "isn't, aren't, am not". Examples:

wǒ shì nǐ-de-'péng-yew. "I'm your friend."

tā shì měy-gwo-'bīng. "He's an American soldier."

wǒ 'bú-shr 'jūng-gwo-rén. "I'm not a Chinese."

'bú-shr 'jūng-gwo-rén. "(Someone we're talking about) isn't a Chinese."

No verb at all in the affirmative is customary in cases in which the second nominal expression is some expression of quantity or measure:

tā 'jīn-nyan 'jǐ-swèy-le? "He this year how many years-of-age?" means "How old is he this year?"

shyàn-dzày 'shéme-shŕ-hew? or shyàn-dzày 'jǐ-dyǎn-jūng? "What time is it now?"

tā-de-tǐ-'jùng yì-bǎy-'èr-shr-'bàng. "Her weight a hundred and twenty pounds." means "She weighs a hundred and twenty."

'jèy-shyē-jī-'dzěr ('měy-)yì-dá 'wǔ-máw-chyán. or 'jèy-shyē-jī-'dzěr 'wǔ-máw-chyán yì-'dá. "These eggs are fifty cents per dozen."

4. Time and Place Expressions

Time and place expressions are nominal expressions which refer to places or to points or periods of time. The formation of time and place expressions shows some irregularity, so that relevant entries are given in fairly full shape. For the formation of time expressions see Ntime, Mtime, MdistT, Msemel; for the formation of place expressions see Nplace and Mpos. The discussion at Demord is also relevant for time expressions.

1. Time-When Expressions. A time-when expression indicates the point of time at which an action occurred or will occur or is occurring, as in answer to a question phrased with "when?". "Point of time" is to be taken relatively; a day is a point of time on the scale of weeks or months, an hour on the scale of days, and so on.

A time-when expression in a sentence comes initially or after an initial nominal referent:

'jīn-nyán tā 'jǐ-swèy-le? or tā 'jīn-nyán 'jǐ-swèy-le? "How old is he this year?"

tsúng 'bā-dyǎn-jūng dàw 'shŕ-dyǎn-jūng 'bù-shywǔ 'chū-chywù. "It's not permitted to leave the premises between eight and ten."

wǒ 'dàw-nèr de-shŕ-hew, tā háy méy-chř-'wán dzǎw-'fàn-ne. "When I got there, he hadn't finished breakfast yet."

A short time-when expression, as in the first example, is more apt to come after an initial unmarked nominal referent (when there is any unmarked nominal referent before the verb). A longer one, as in the second sentence or the third, will precede the first unmarked nominal referent if there is any such.

2. Duration and Frequency. A time expression specifying how long some activity lasts (in terms of elapsed time, not in terms of starting-point and end-point), or specifying frequency, comes at the end of the sentence:

wǒ-men dzày chúng-'chìng jù-le sān-'nyán-le. "We've lived in Chungking for three years."

wǒ 'dzwó-tyan 'kàn-jyan ta 'sān-tsz̀. "I saw him three times yesterday."

3. Temporal Terminus. A time expression may come after a V or an RC3 (possibly, but rarely, an RC4) in the function of a nominal referent of the type termed a terminus—specifying point of time until which or beyond which some activity is carried on:

wǒ-men yì-'tyān tsúng 'dzǎw-chen 'máng-dàw 'wǎn-shang. "We're busy the whole day, from morning to evening."

4. Location. Sentences which serve to locate things use place expressions in one of the following ways; the second three are practically equivalent and the first of those three is most common:

'yān dzày 'jwō-dz-shang. "The cigarettes are on the table." (We are interested in the cigarettes; the sentence tells where they are to be found.)

'jwō-dz-shang yěw-'yān. "There are cigarettes on the table." (We are interested in the table; the sentence gives us some information about it.)

yěw-'yān dzày 'jwō-dz-shang. (ditto)

dzày 'jwō-dz-shang yěw-'yān. (ditto)

5. Place at Which. A specification of the place at which (in which, on which, etc.) something occurs is given by the coverb dzày before the place expression, or by a place expression following an RC which has dzày as postverb:

nǐ dzày-'nǎr dzwò-'shŕ? "Where do you work?"

tā 'dzwò-dzày 'něy-bǎ-'yǐ-dz-shang láy-je? "Which chair has he been sitting in?"

6. Place from Which. A specification of the place from which, past or through which, or the direction from which, an activity occurs is given by the coverb tsúng followed by a place expression:

tā tsúng 'měy-gwo láy-de. "He's from the United States."

tā tsúng 'wū-dz-li 'pǎw-chū-láy-le. "He came running out of the house."

7. Place to Which. A specification of direction in which or place or direction towards which is given with the coverb shyàng or wàng:

A specification of place to which is given by using a place expression as terminus after an appropriate V or RC3 or RC4:

nǐ 'shéme-shŕ-hew ké-yi 'dàw-jèr? "When can you get here?"

A specification of place beyond which is given with the coverb gwò, the verb gwò, or an RC3 or RC4 with gwò as postverb:

jèy-ge-'hé dzám dzěme 'gwò-ne? "How can we get across this river?"

8. Finer shades of meaning in expressions of location, attained in English by a variety of prepositions and compound prepositions (on, on top of, onto the top of, from the top of, etc.) are attained in Chinese by combining the small available number of coverbs (verbs, postverbs) with a larger number of relative place expressions suffixed to a nominal expression. Thus with tsúng "from", dzày "at", and dàw "to", the relative place expressions 'lǐ-tew (lǐ, li) "inside", 'shàng-tew (shàng, shang) "topside", and the two nouns 'jwō-dz "table", 'wū-dz "room", such shades as the following are attainable:

tsúng 'jwō-dz-shàng "from on top of the table"
dzày 'jwō-dz-shang "on top of the table" dàw 'jwō-dz-shang "onto the table"

tsúng 'wū-dz-li "from inside the room" dzày 'wū-dz-li "in the room"
dàw 'wū-dz-li "into the room"

5. Questions and Requests

Questions in Chinese are of two kinds: alternative questions and question-word questions.

ALTERNATIVE QUESTIONS

An alternative question is a sentence which posits two or more alternative possibilities; the answer is given by stating which of the possibilities is the case. When there are two possibilities given, specifically whether a particular thing is the case or is not the case ("Is this or isn't this a book?"), Chinese cannot phrase an answer simply in terms of "yes" or "no," since there are no general words for "yes" and "no" in the language; the phrasing of the answer has to depend on the specific words used in the question.

Alternative questions are formed in the following ways:

1. Repetition of a verb or adjective with bū (or méy) between. Examples:

nǐ 'shì-bu-shì 'jūng-gwo-'bīng? "You are-not-are Chinese soldier?" means "Are you a Chinese soldier?" Aff. A.: 'shì. "Am." means "Yes." Neg. A.: 'bú-shì. "Not am." means "No."

nǐ 'chywù-bu-chywù? "You go-not-go?" means "Are you going?" Aff. A.: (wǒ) 'chywù. "Yes, I'm going." Neg. A.: (wǒ) 'bú-chywù. "No, I'm not going."

nèy-běn-'shū 'hǎw-bu-hǎw? "That book good-not-good?" means "How's that book?" Aff. A.: 'hǎw. "OK." or hěn 'hǎw. "Quite good." etc. Neg. A.: 'bù-hǎw. "Bad." or bù-hěn 'hǎw. "Not very good." etc.

tā 'yěw-méy-yew 'yǎn? "He has-not-has cigarettes?" means "Has he any cigarettes?" Aff. A.: 'yěw. "Yes." Neg. A.: 'méy-yěw. "No."

yěw-'méy-yew bǐ-'jèy-ge-hǎw-de-'yān? "Are there any cigarettes better than these (available)?" Aff. A.: 'yěw. "Yes." Neg. A.: 'méy-yew. "No."

Notice that with all verbs and adjectives save yěw "to have; there is, there are" the negative element inserted is bū (toneless: bu); with yěw the negative element inserted is méy.

The affirmative and negative answers to the questions are phrased with the verb or adjective which occurred in the question; in the first example, shì "is, equals", in the question and therefore in the answers; in the second example, chywù "to go"; in the third, hǎw "to be OK"; in the last two, yěw. More elaborate answers are possible, and are often more polite. Thus to any of the above questions the answer might be (wǒ) bù-'jǐ-dàw "I don't know"; to the last, one might say shyàn-dzày 'méy-yew "not right now"; to the second, one might say wǒ shyǎng 'bú-chywù "I don't think I'm going" or "I guess I won't go"; and so on. These longer answers are generally better to use, in order to avoid misunderstanding or bad feeling because of unintended impoliteness. Note, however, that even in the longer answers, with the one exception of the "I don't know" answer, the verb or adjective of the question forms the nucleus of what is said.

Answers to other types of alternative questions are in the main similar to the answers to this type; further comment is given only where they are different.

2. Addition of bū (or méy) plus verb or adjective at the end of the sentence. Examples:

nǐ shì jūng-gwo-'bīng bú-shì? "You are Chinese soldier not-are?" means "Are you a Chinese soldier?" Answers as to type 1.

tā yěw-'yān méy-yew? "He has cigarettes not-has?" means "Has he any cigarettes?"

yěw bǐ-jèy-ge-'hǎw-de-yān méy-yew? "There are cigarettes better than these not-are?" means "Are there any cigarettes better than these?"

3. Addition of méy-yew to a sentence containing -le. Examples:

nǐ 'kàn-jyàn(-le) ta méy-yew? "Have you seen him?" Aff. A.: 'kàn-jyàn-le. "I have." Neg. A.: 'méy-kàn-jyan. or 'méy-yew. "I haven't."

chī-le dzǎw-'fàn méy-yew? "Have you had breakfast?" Aff. A.: 'chī-le. "Yes." or 'chī-gwo-le. "Yes, I've had my breakfast." or 'yǐ-jing 'chī-gwo-le. "I've already eaten." Neg. A.: 'méy-chī. or 'méy-yew. "No." or háy-'méy-chī-ne. or háy-'méy-ne. "Not yet."

If a sentence contains le after the verb or at the end, this and 4 below are the only ways of making an alternative question of it. With RC, as in the first example, the le is sometimes omitted. This and 4 below are also the methods of making alternative questions when the sentence contains gwo, either in addition to le or in place of it.

The affirmative answer must contain the verb of the sentence itself. The negative answer, however, may consist of 'méy-yew alone or modified as indicated in the second example above.

4. Addition of -ma. This is the most generally applicable way of making alternative questions and is usable in place of any of the three ways so far given.

-ma means simply "Is this statement so or not?" Examples:

nǐ shì 'jūng-gwo-bīng-ma? "Are you a Chinese soldier?"

nǐ 'chywù-ma? "Are you going?"

nèy-běn-'shū 'hǎw-ma? "Is that book good?"

tā yěw-'yān-ma? "Has he any cigarettes?"

yěw bǐ-jèy-ge-'hǎw-de-yān-ma? "Are there any cigarettes better than these?"

nǐ 'kàn-jyàn ta-le-ma? "Have you seen him?"

chǐ-le dzǎw-'fàn-le-ma? "Have you had breakfast?"

The answers are as in 1, 2, and 3. If -ma is replaceable by 'méy-yew, as in the last two cases, then a negative answer may consist of 'méy-yew or its modifications, as in 3.

5. Longer Alternatives. — a. An alternative (agreement-disagreement type) question is made with an RC in potential form either by method 4 or by putting both the potential forms into the sentence:

nèy-gēr-'jù-dz nǐ 'kàn-de-jyàn 'kàn-bu-jyàn? "That post you can-see can't-see?" means "Can you see that post?" Aff. A.: kàn-de-'jyàn. "I can." Neg. A.: kàn-bu-'jyàn. "I can't."

A long answer might take the form kàn-de-'jyàn, kě-shr kàn-bu-'chīng-chu "I can see it (i.e., my eyes are all right), but I can't make out clearly what it is (i.e., because of dust or fog)."

b. Alternatives not of the agreement-disagreement type, but of multiple-choice identification, are made by repeating, with modifications, longer expressions:

nǐ-de-'péng-yew shì 'nán-de shì 'nywǔ-de? "Your friend is male is female?" means "Is your friend a man or a woman?" Answers: shì-'nán-de. "A man." etc.

Ordinarily no word is included for the "or" expressed in English. Sometimes, however, such a word is included, usually 'háy-shr, sometimes 'hwò-shr or 'hwò-je shì:

jè-ge-'hé-dz-lǐ-tew shì 'píng-dz (háy-)shì 'wǎn háy-shr 'gwō? "What's in this box? Is it bottles or bowls or plates?" Answer in the form shì 'píng-dz. "It's bottles."

The same pattern is sometimes used for the agreement-disagreement type of alternative question:

tā 'shì-bīng 'bú-shr bīng-nga? "Well, is he a soldier or isn't he?"

tā shì 'láy-ne háy-shr 'bù-láy-ne? "Well, is he coming or isn't he?"

nǐ shì 'yàw-wa háy-shr 'bú-yàw-ne? "Well, are you going to take it or aren't you?"

6. Questions with Negative Emphasis. Similar to 4 but differing in emphasis are questions ending in -ma but with the verb preceded by bū or méy:

tā bú-shr nǐ-de-'péng-yew-ma? "Isn't he your friend?"

7. Expressions with Postposed Alternative Questions. A simple statement or suggestion may be followed, sometimes with intervening pause, by an interrogative comment of the forms 'dwèy-bu-dwèy or 'dwèy-ma "is that right?" or bú-'dwèy-ma "isn't that right?":

wǒ-men gēn-ta 'chywù, 'hǎw-bu-hǎw? "We'll go with him, OK?"

wǒ dzày-'jèr 'děng ta, 'ké-yi-bu-ké-yi? "I'll wait here for him, may I?"

wǒ bǎ jèy-ge ná-'dzěw, 'shíng-ma? "I'll take this along with me, all right?"

In such cases the questioning part is the postposed phrase, not the main part of the sentence, and so the answer is phrased with the verb or adjective used there:

'hǎw. "OK."
'ké-yi. "Sure you may."
bù-'shíng. "No, you may not."

QUESTION-WORD QUESTIONS

A number of words in Chinese have the dual function of being N, Pron, A, etc., and of at the same time indicating either (1) that the sentence is a question, or (2) indefiniteness. Here only the question use is relevant. Such questions cannot be answered by expressing agreement or disagreement, or by indicating which alternative is the case; they call for more explicit information of some kind (as to an English question such as "Who is he?"). These question-words do not have some special position in the sentence, as their equivalents in English do ("why?" always begins the sentence in English), but come rather in the normal position for an N, a Pron, and so on, depending on what they are.

1. Questions about Identity. shwéy or shéy means "who?"; nǎ or něy means "which?"; shém-me or shéme means "what?":

tā shì-'shéy? "Who's he?"

wǒ děy gēn-'shéy shwō-'hwà? "Who must I speak with?"

'jèy-ge-dūng-shi shì-'shéy-de? "Whose is this?"

nǐ 'něy-tyān ké-yi 'dàw-jèr? "Which day can you get here?"

'něy-yí-ge-'wǎn shì dzwèy-'gwèy-de? "Which bowl is most expensive?"

'jè-shì shéme? "What's this?"

2. Questions about Place. This is properly a subdivision of 1, since the forms used are 'nǎ-li (shortened to nǎr) "where?"; shéme-'dì-fang "what place?, where?";

'něy-ge-dì-fang "which place?"; and various specific combinations involving nă or shéme:

nǐ dàw-'năr chywù? "Where are you going?"

hwŏ-chē-'jàn dzày-'năr? "Where's the railroad station?"

3. Questions about Time. This also is properly a subdivision of 1; the most often used expression is shéme-'shí-hew "what time?, when?"; but all sorts of specific combinations such as 'něy-tyān "what day?" are possible:

tā 'shéme-shí-hew 'dàw-de? "What time did he get here?"

4. Questions about Manner. In addition to combinations such as shéme-'fá-dz "what method?, what plan?", which fall logically under 1, there is also the form 'dzěm-me or dzěme "how?":

dàw hwŏ-chē-'jàn chywù dzěme 'dzěw-wa? "How do I go to get to the station?"

tā 'dzěme néng bàn-de-'hăw-ne? "How can he do it right?"

5. Questions about Kind. 'dzěme-yàng means "of what kind?, in what condition?"; 'shéme-yàng is similar:

tā 'jīn-tyan dzěme-'yàng-le? "How is he today?" (Asked, for example, of someone known to have been ill.)

6. Questions about Quantity. jĭ means "how many?" when the answer is expected to be relatively small—say not more than ten or twelve; 'dwō-shaw means "how many?" when a larger answer is expected or when there is no particular expectation:

tā yĕw 'jĭ-ge-háy-dz-le? "How many children has he?"

jèy-ge-gūng-'chăng yùng-je 'dwō-shăw-rén? "How many people does this factory employ?"

dwō (rarely dwō-shaw) precedes an A in similar questions:

nèy-ge-'fáng-dz yĕw 'dwō-dà? "How big is that house?"

7. Questions about Reason. 'wèy-shéme is "why?"; dzěme "how?" is sometimes used where English would have "why?":

nǐ 'wèy-shéme 'láy-de dzème-'wăn-ne? "Why are you so late?"

nǐ 'dzěme 'láy-de dzème-'wăn-ne? "How come you're so late?"

8. Answers to Question-Word Questions. The answers to question-word questions, in Chinese as in English, are full sentences (even though sometimes very short) giving the information requested, and do not necessarily turn on the phrasing of the question.

For slight variations in emphasis of questions of both types (alternative and question-word), see the entries ne and a.

REQUESTS

There is no special sentence set-up for making requests (orders, commands, suggestions) in Chinese. A request may simply be a sentence specifying what the person spoken to is to do:

bă nèy-bă-'yĭ-dz 'dì-gey wo. "Pass me that chair."

The actor, nĭ "you", may perfectly well be expressed:

nĭ bă nèy-bă-'yĭ-dz 'dì-gey wo. (ditto).

These requests, with or without nĭ, are pretty brusque, in Chinese as in English. Politeness equivalent to the prefixing of "please" in English is achieved in Chinese by prefixing chĭng "to request, to invite":

chĭng(-ni) bă nèy-bă-'yĭ-dz 'dì-gey wo. "Please pass me that chair."

Request sentences often add -ba, but -ba is not confined to requests and orders, having rather a general meaning of "I think it must be so":

'dzĕw-ba! "Scram!"

wŏ-men 'dzĕw-ba! "Let's get going!"

bú-'dwèy-ba! "That can't be right!" or "I don't think that can be right!"

The degree of brusqueness of such sentences depends considerably on the tone of voice in which they are said.

Negative requests, or prohibitions, have all of the variations outlined above (with or without chĭng or -ba); but, instead of prefixing a negative adverb to the nucleus, one precedes it with 'bú-yàw or byé "don't":

chĭng-ni byé 'dzĕw. "Please don't go."

'byé dzĕw. "Don't go!" (brusque) or "Please don't go."

byé 'dzĕw-ba! "No! Don't go!" (fairly polite).

Here also the degree of politeness depends a great deal more on the circumstances and the tone of voice than on the actual words chosen.

6. Alphabetical Listing of Code Symbols with Explanation and Comment

A = Adjectives

1. Adjectives are used as attributives before nouns or containing measures (Mcont). An adjective or adjectival expression of more than one syllable generally adds de:

'hăw-rén "good people"

shīn-'yī-fu "new clothes"

dà-'shí-tew "a big stone"

yí-'dà-wăn-'fàn "a big bowl of rice"

hăw-'kàn-de-'nywŭ-rén "good-looking women"

2. When an adjective functions as nucleus of a sentence, it may be preceded by a nominal referent (actor) which specifies the person or thing characterized. Usually one or more adverbs or particles surround the adjective to indicate that the characterization is relative, not absolute. On occasion the actor is omitted:

jèy-jāng-'jwō-dz hěn 'dà. "That table is quite big."

wǒ jywé-je 'tày dà. "I think (it) is too big."

3. With an adjective as sentence nucleus, a second nominal referent, marked by bǐ "as compared with" or lí "as measured from", may follow the actor:

'jèy-jāng-jwō-dz bǐ 'nèy-jāng-jwō-dz 'dà. "This table is bigger than that one."

'jèy-ge-dì-fangr lí hwǒ-chē-'jàn bù-'ywǎn. "This place isn't far from the railroad station."

4. If a second nominal referent marked by bǐ (not by lí) is present, a third nominal referent may be placed after the adjective, stating the amount of difference:

'nǐ bǐ-'tā 'gāw sān-'tswèn. "You're three inches taller than he."

'wǒ bǐ-'tā 'dà shŕ-'swèy. "I'm ten years older than he."

'jèy-ge bǐ 'nèy-ge 'hǎw yì-dyǎr. "This is a little better than that."

5. If there is no second nominal referent, the same type of third nominal referent after the adjective indicates desirable or undesirable excess:

jèy-kwày-'bǎn-dz 'cháng-le sān-'tswèn. "This board is three inches too long."

'tyān-chi 'rè-le yì-dyǎr. "The weather has gotten a bit warmer."

6. The verb yěw "to have, there is, there are" followed by an expression of quantity and an adjective indicates measurement:

jèy-jāng-'jwō-dz yěw 'lyèw-chř-cháng. "This table is six feet long."

wǒ yěw yì-dyǎr-'rè. "I'm a bit warm."

'jù-dz yěw yì-'rén-gāw. "The post is the height of a man."

wǒ-nèy-pǐ-mǎ méy-yew 'nǐ-nèy-pǐ 'kwày. "My horse doesn't have the speed of yours."

'jèy-ge-léw yěw 'dwō gāw? "How high is this building?"

7. The verb shř "is, equals" followed by an adjective plus de indicates assignment of the actor to a class of, say, "large" things or "small" things, rather than a comparative judgment of size:

tā-chwān-de-'yī-fu shř 'húng-de. "The dress she's wearing is a red one."

'nèy-jāng-jwō-dz 'bú-shr dǐng-'dà-de. "That table isn't one of our largest ones."

8. A few adjectives, or expressions built on them, precede or follow entire sentences as comments on them:

'dzwèy hǎw 'shǎw chř. "It would be best to eat only a little."

wǒ 'gēn-ni 'chywù, 'hǎw-bu-hǎw? "I'll go with you, OK?"

'jème-je hǎw. "Doing it this way will be all right."

wǒ shyǎng 'tā dzwò nèy-jyàn-'shř-ching hěn 'hǎw. "I think he'd do that job quite well." or "I think it would be quite OK for him to do that job."

9. After a sentence ending in a verb or adjective, another adjective or adjective expression may occur as a further characterization of the action or state already detailed; in this case the original sentence often, but not always, adds de. The last example in par. 8 is a case of this when taken in the first sense given. The last example below has two such final commenting adjectives, each a comment on all that precedes it:

tā 'dzěw-de hěn 'kwày. "He's walking very fast." or "He walks very fast." or "He walked very fast."

chǐng 'shwō 'màn-yi-dyǎr. "Please speak a bit more slowly."

wǒ-de-'shyé 'tsā-de 'lyàng-de 'dwō. "My shoes are much better polished."

10. When the same sort of postposed commenting adjective expression is added to a sentence in which the verb is not in final position, the verb is often repeated again, with de added, directly before the final adjective expression:

tā dzwò 'jèy-jyàn-shř-ching dzwò-de hěn 'hǎw. "He did that job quite well." or "He's doing that job quite well."

11. Some adjectives and adjective expressions, mainly monosyllabic adjectives or expressions based thereon, are used immediately before other adjectives, or before adverbs, or before verbs, in the function of adverbial modifiers to the latter:

hǎw 'jyěw méy-'jyàn! "Good long-time haven't seen!"="Haven't seen you in a long time."

'bú-dà hǎw. "Not too terribly good."

chǐng 'màn-yi-dyǎr shwō. "Please speak more slowly."

12. a. Monosyllabic adjectives are doubled, the second repetition having first tone regardless of the tone of the underlying simple adjective, and suffix final de to form intensives: some speakers consistently use the second tone rather than the first on the second syllable; some speakers often add the element -r to the second syllable, according to the rules of combination for -r given in Section D. Thus:

hēy "black": hēy-ˈhēy-de "very black"

hwáng "yellow": hwáng-ˈhwāng-de "very yellow"

hǎw "OK": hǎw-ˈhāw(r)-de "very, very fine" kwày "fast": kwày-ˈkwāy-de or kwày-ˈkwār-de "very fast"

b. Many two-syllable adjectives form a similar intensive by doubling each syllable independently, with no tone changes, and adding de:

ˈrúng-yì "easy": ˈrúng-rung-yì-ˈyì-de "extremely easy"

c. Such intensives are not full-fledged adjectives; they are used as attributive adjectives (Aattr) and as adverbs (H).

13. Many adjectives serve as main verbs (mainV) or as postverbs (postV) in resultative compounds (RC). RC with an adjective as main verb are usually of types one or three; those with an adjective as postverb are of type two:

ˈān-jìng-shyà-chywù (RC1) "to calm down" (ˈān-jìng "calm")

ˈmáng-dàw (RC3) "to be busy until" (a time limit) (máng "busy") nùng-ˈhwày-le (RC2) "to spoil" something (hwày "spoiled, bad, out of fix, out of order")

Aattr = Attributive Adjectives

1. Attributive adjectives are used as attributives before nouns:

ˈnán-rén "male person", "man"

ˈnywǔ-rén "female person", "woman"

2. The verb shì "is, equals" followed by an attributive adjective plus de indicates assignment of the actor to a class of objects which share the characteristic denoted by the attributive adjective:

nǐ-de-ˈpéng-yew shì ˈnán-de shì ˈnywǔ-de? "Is your friend male or female?"

Dem = Demonstratives

Demonstratives function as, or participate in, nominal expressions in the ways outlined below. Nominal expressions beginning in a demonstrative are definite.

1. The demonstratives jè(y) "this, this here, here" and nèy, nà "that, that there, there" constitute complete nominal expressions, but only at or near the beginning of a sentence:

ˈjè-shì wǒ-de-ˈpéng-yew. "This is my friend."

2. A demonstrative followed by a measure (M) constitutes a nominal expression: ˈjèy-ge "this"; ˈnèy-tyān "that day".

chú-le ˈjèy-ge dēw hěn hǎw. "Except for this one they're all quite OK."

3. A demonstrative followed by a measure and a noun constitutes a nominal expression: jèy-wǎn-ˈfàn "this bowl of rice".

ˈjèy-pǐ-mǎ bǐ ˈnèy-pǐ-mǎ ˈkwày. "This horse is faster than that one."

4. A demonstrative followed by a numeral and a measure constitutes a nominal expression: ˈjèy-jǐ-tyān "these few days" (meaning "these past few days").

ˈnǐy-yí-ge dēw ˈké-yi. "Any one of them will do."

5. A demonstrative followed by a numeral, a measure, and a noun constitutes a nominal expression: jèy-ˈyí-ge-rén "this one person".

jèy-ˈlyǎng-ge-nywǔ-rén ˈdēw-shì wǒ-de-ˈpéng-yew. "These two women are both my friends."

Demord = Ordinal Demonstratives

Ordinal demonstratives participate in nominal expressions as outlined below. Nominal expressions beginning in an ordinal demonstrative are definite.

1. An ordinal demonstrative followed by a measure (M), almost always an MdistT, Msemel, or Mtime, constitutes a nominal expression:

ˈjīn-tyān "this day", "today"

ˈdzwó-tyān "yesterday"

ˈshyà-tsz̀ "next time"

2. An ordinal demonstrative followed by an Ntime constitutes a nominal expression:

ˈshàng-lǐ-bày "last week"

3. An ordinal demonstrative followed by a numeral and a measure (as in par. 1) constitutes a nominal expression:

shyà-ˈlyǎng-tsz̀ "the next two times"

There are limitations on all of the above, and full examples are given at relevant entries.

H = Adverbs

1. Adverbs are used directly before an adjectival or verbal nucleus of a sentence, or separated therefrom only by another adverb or adverbial expression, as adverbial modifiers to the nucleus:

(wǒ) hěn ˈhǎw, shyè-shye. "I'm quite well, thanks."

ˈlyǎng-ge ˈdēw ké-yi. "The two collectively are possible."="Both are all right."

màn-ˈmār-de dzěw. "Go very slowly." (With intensive form from adjective màn "slow"; see Section A, par. 12.)

2. After a sentence ending in a verb or adjective, certain adverbs (mainly those longer than one syllable) may occur as a further characterization of the action or state already detailed; in this case the sentence to which the addition is made often, but not always, adds de.

'nà hǎw-de 'hěn. "That's extremely fine."

'nà hǎw 'jí-le. "That's very, very fine." (jí is confined to this usage.)

I = Intransitive Verbs

1. Intransitive verbs, or expressions built on them, are used as attributives to nouns, always with de added save in special cases listed as entries:

'láy-le-de-rén "the ones who have come"

'yǐ-jing-'láy-le-de-rén "the ones who have already come"

2. With an intransitive verb as nucleus of a sentence, a nominal referent in the function of actor may be included; an actor placed after the verb is indefinite and must be indefinite in form; an actor placed before the verb is definite regardless of its form:

'láy-le hěn-dwō-de-'bīng. "A lot of soldiers came."

tā kwày 'láy-le. "He'll be coming soon."

With compound I of two or more syllables (not RC), only a preposed actor is used:

míng-tyan-'wǎn-shang dà-dzǔng-'tǔng yàw yǎn-'shwō. "Tomorrow night the president is going to make a speech."

A preposed actor, if not definite in form, can be rendered indefinite by prefixing yěw "there's ... which":

yěw-'rén yǎn-'shwō láy-je. "(At the meeting) there was someone who made a speech."

3. With an indefinite actor after the intransitive verb, another nominal referent is sometimes placed before the verb, designating the causal agent:

nǐ 'wèy-shéme méy-láy-'shìn? "Why haven't you (seen to it that) some letters came?"="Why haven't you written?"

nǐ jù-'dzwěy-ba! "You (cause to) stop the mouth!"="Shut up!"

The agent may be understood from context:

jù-'dzwěy-ba! "Shut up!"

'dzày láy wǎn-'fàn! "Bring another bowl of rice!"

The above construction is relatively limited; normally to use an intransitive verb causatively one uses a resultative compound with the intransitive verb in question as second member (postverb); see RC2.

4. With an actor before or after the intransitive verb, another nominal referent is sometimes placed at the beginning of the sentence, designating the undergoer of the stated experience:

wǒ 'lyéw-le hěn-dwō-'shyě. "I've lost a lot of blood." (lyéw "to flow", shyě "blood".)

wǒ-de-'yī-fu 'dyàw-le yí-ge-'kèw-dz. "My clothes there dropped off a button."="I lost a button off my clothes."

wǒ 'shyě (wàng-wày) 'lyéw-de hěn 'kwày. "I was losing blood fast."

5. Some intransitive verbs occur with a designation of place after them; an actor, if any is specified, precedes the verb:

tsúng 'chyán-tyan 'chǐ, wǒm 'dzěw-le hěn-dwō-'lù. "Since the day before yesterday we've walked a lot of road."="We've done a lot of walking since the day before yesterday."

6. Intransitive verbs occur as main verbs (mainV) or as postverbs (postV) in resultative compounds (RC). RC with an intransitive verb as main verb are of types one or three (sometimes, with the verb used causatively, of type two or four); those with an intransitive verb as postverb are of type one or two:

'dzěw-láy (RC1) "to come walking" (both parts I)

'dzěw-dàw (RC3) "to walk to" (a place)

dǎ-'lyè-le (RC2) "to break by striking" (lyè I "to crack")

IN = Intransitive Verb and Noun

IN are lexical units consisting of an intransitive verb and a noun standing in the relation of actor to the verb. The special meaning of the unit is retained even if the parts are separated by other words or if the actor is made definite and thereby precedes the verb; on occasion an agent or an undergoer is added before the group. Thus shyà-'ywǔ "to rain":

shyà yí-jèn-'ywǔ "to rain once"

'ywǔ 'shyà-de hěn 'dà. "The rain is coming down hard."

For full treatment of the possibilities see I.

J = Conjunction

A conjunction is placed either at the beginning of the sentence or, if a nominal referent precedes the nucleus, immediately after that nominal referent:

rè-shr nǐ 'shyǎng ... "If you think ..."

nǐ rè-shr 'shyǎng ... (ditto)

Some conjunctions consist of an element (often an H) plus shr̀ "is, are". Of these, some function also as combination of adverb (H) and verb shr̀:

bú-shr 'tā jyèw-shr 'nǐ. "If it isn't he then it's you."

K = Coverbs

Coverbs serve to mark nominal referents in a sentence, either (1) connecting the following nominal referent to a preceding one, or (2) indicating the relation of the following nominal referent to all the rest of the sentence. Thus:

wǒ hé-'nǐ "you and I"

Original from UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

wǒ-men gēn yín-ˈháng jyè-ˈchyán. "We borrow money from (literally with) the bank."

In case (2), the coverb, together with the nominal referent it precedes and marks, functions adverbially in the sentence, coming always before the nuclear word.

l; lc = láy; láy or chywù

The symbols l or lc given in the coding of a verb (I, V, RC) indicate that when that verb is used as the nucleus of a sentence, láy (in the first case), or láy or chywù (in the second), are added later. The details of meaning are given at the entry láy.

Furthermore, if in a particular sentence no other words intervene between an I or V which calls for final láy or chywù and that final element, the group is an RC of type one or two.

M = Measure

A measure is a noun-like form which is used on occasion immediately after a numeral or demonstrative. An autonomous measure (MgroupA, MpersA, Mauton, Mmeas, Mpos, Mtime, MdistT, MdistS) carries a full meaning when not followed by a noun; thus yì-ˈshěng "a province". An auxiliary measure (Mclass, Mcont, Mgroup, Mpart, Munit) used without a following noun carries specific meaning only in the light of the context; thus yí-ˈkwày is "a hunk" of anything which might come in hunks, including "dollars" because yí-kwày-ˈchyán "one hunk money" means "one dollar".

Measures are used in nominal forms as follows:

1. Numeral followed by measure:
   sān-ˈshěng "three provinces"
   sž-ˈlǐ "four miles"
   ˈyí-ge "one"
2. Numeral followed by measure followed by noun:
   yí-ge-ˈrén "a person"
3. A measure plus a noun:
   ge-ˈrén "a person"

This is equivalent to the same preceded by numeral yī "one, a, an" and occurs only when the whole expression is preceded directly by a V, I, RC, or K (verbs and coverbs), or by A or H.

4. A demonstrative or an ordinal demonstrative followed by a measure:
   ˈjèy-ge "this"
   ˈjīn-tyān "today"
5. A demonstrative plus a measure plus a noun:
   ˈjèy-ge-rén "this person"
6. A demonstrative plus a numeral plus a measure:
   ˈjèy-yí-ge "this one"
7. A demonstrative plus a numeral plus a measure plus a noun:
   ˈjèy-yí-ge-rén "this one person"

mainV = Main Verb

The first of the two constituents of an RC is called the main verb. When in the discussion of a form the phrase "As mainV:" occurs, it indicates that the following subentries are, or that the following sentences include, resultative compounds with the head entry functioning as a main verb. If the head entry is an A or I, the RC are of type one or three (save for a few cases in which an I is used causatively as mainV in an RC2 or RC4); if the head entry is a V, the RC are of type two or four.

Mauton = Autonomous Measures (See also M)

A random group of noun-like words meaning mainly, but not entirely, geographical and political areas, function as measures rather than as nouns, and are coded in this way. They are autonomous measures, but have no other special characteristics. For example:

lyǎng-ˈgwó "two countries"
sān-ˈshěng "three provinces"

Mclass = Classifying Measures (See also M)

Classifying measures are auxiliary measures, with meanings such as "kind of, grade of, class of": sān-jǔng-ˈfǔ-dz "three kinds of axes", with Mclass jǔng. They are special in that almost any noun may be preceded by a classifying measure, there being various limitations in the use of other types of measures with the different types of nouns.

Mcont = Containing Measures (See also M)

A containing measure is an auxiliary measure, designating some containerful of the substance named by the noun:

yì-wǎn-ˈfàn "a bowl of rice"

MdistS = Spatially Distributive Measures (See also M)

MdistT = Temporally Distributive Measures (See also M)

When a distributive measure is used with a numeral larger than one, it indicates that the things or events specified are at different and discrete places (spatial) or that they occurred at different and discrete times (temporal). Thus ˈsān-chù-ˈchyǎng-àn "three cases of robbery" at different places, perhaps at the same time or during the same night; ˈsān-tsž-ˈchyǎng-àn "three cases of robbery" at different times, perhaps at the same house or store.

Temporally distributive measures are used:

1. After a verb, or a verb and any postposed noun referent, as an indication of frequency:

wǒ 'dzwó-tyan 'kàn-jyàn ta 'sān-tsž. "I saw him three times yesterday."

2. Between a verb (V or I) and a nominal referent:

'dǎ yí-tsž-'chyéwr "play ball once"

'shyà-le sān-jèn-'ywǔ. "There were three spells of rain."

3. More rarely, before a group of V and noun or of I and noun, the latter group being thereby nominalized:

'nèy-tsž-chū-'shr̀ "that accident" (chū-'shr̀ "to have an accident")

Mgroup = Grouping Measures (See also M)

Grouping measures are used with appropriate nouns (mainly personal nouns and mass nouns) to indicate groups of some kind:

yì-chywún-'rén "a group of people"

yì-chywún-'ywú "a school of fish"

Occasionally a grouping measure is used with a collective noun:

yí-tàw-jwō-'yǐ "a matching set of tables and chairs"

MgroupA = Autonomous Grouping Measures (See also M)

Autonomous grouping measures are also used, with full meaning, without any following noun:

yì-lyán-'bīng "a company (military unit) of soldiers"

yì-'lyán "a company, troop, battery"

Mmeas = Measures of Weight, Length, Area, Etc. (See also M)

These are used:

1. Before a noun:

sān-jīn-'táng "three catties of sugar"

2. Preceded by yěw and followed by an adjective:

'jèy-kwày-'bīng yěw 'sān-jīn-'jùng. "This piece of ice has three catties heavy."="This piece of ice weighs three pounds."

3. After adjectives:

'jèy-kwày-'bīng 'jùng sān-'jìn. "This piece of ice weighs three catties too much."

Or,

'jèy-kwày-'bīng bǐ 'nèy-kwày-'bīng 'jùng sān-'jìn. "This piece of ice is three catties heavier than that piece."

Mpart = Partitive Measures (See also M)

A partitive measure indicates a part or portion of something named by a unit noun or mass noun; except for dyǎr "a little bit of", partitive measures with mass nouns are not distinguishable from individualizing measures with mass nouns, and are not specially designated. Thus:

yì-tséng-'léw "one floor of a building" dyǎr (or dyǎn) "a little, a bit", the most general partitive measure, is used in the patterns given above for Mmeas.

MpersA = Autonomous Personal Measures (See also M)

A few elements also used in other ways are sometimes used as measures specifying various kinds of people. In a hospital, thus, nèy-'chwáng, literally "that bed" (chwáng being otherwise a noun), may be said to mean "that bed's patient, the patient assigned to that bed".

Mpos = Measures of Position and Shape (See also M)

Mpos participate in expressions of place as follows:

1. Preceded by a numeral occasionally, more often by a demonstrative:

'jè-li (usually reduced to jèr) "here"

'lyǎng-byar "both sides"

2. Preceded by a nominal expression, most often lǐ "space inside" and shàng "space on top of or above", but occasionally others:

'wū-dz-li "in the room"

'jwō-dz-shang "on the table"

3. Type 1 in turn preceded by a nominal expression:

'jwō-dz-de-'lyǎng-byar "both sides of the table"

'wǒ-jèr "here where I am"

Msemel = Semelfactive Measures (See also M)

A semelfactive measure indicates single action, though not necessarily instantaneous action. Semelfactive measures follow verbs; the numeral is usually yī "one".

1. After a verb of striking, hitting, kicking, and the like, a term specifying the instrument with which the blow is delivered functions as a semelfactive measure meaning "a blow with" that instrument:

'dǎ-ta yì-'chywán. "Strike him a blow with the fist."

'tī-ta yì-'jyǎw. "Kick him once with the foot."

2. After some verbs one or another measure occurs with no meaning except that described above for all semelfactive measures:

'gàw-sung wo yì-'shēngr literally "Tell me a little noise." meaning "(Just) let me know."

'dă-ta yí-shyàr. "Hit him once."

3. After a one-syllable verb (V) the same morpheme is repeated as semelfactive measure; only yī "one" is possible before it:

tā 'shyăng-le yì-shyăng. "He thought for a minute."

chĭng-ni 'tīng-yi-tīng. "Listen to me for a minute."

wŏm 'tán yì-tán-'hwà-ba. "Let's talk a bit."

Mtime = Measures of Time (See also M)

Measures of time are autonomous measures which specify periods of time: tyān "day", nyán "year". Thus:

'jèy-jĭ-tyān "these few days"

'lyăng-nyán "two years"

Munit = Unit Measures (See also M)

A unit measure is used with a personal noun, non-personal unit noun, or (some of them) with a non-personal mass noun; as indicated at entries, some of them are used with time nouns or place nouns.

The Munit used with personal nouns have specific connotations as outlined under Npers.

An Munit used with a non-personal unit noun adds no meaning to the unit noun itself except when some choice is possible: thus yì-bă-'yĭ-dz "one chair" and yì-jāng-'yĭ-dz "one chair" differ in that the Munit bă used in the first case emphasizes the fact that the chair has a back by which it can be picked up and carried around, whereas the Munit jāng used in the second case stresses rather the flat sitting surface of the chair (see entries bă and jāng).

An Munit used with a mass noun has individualizing function, specifying some quantity or portion of the mass in terms of which it can be counted or measured; see under Nmass.

N = Nouns

A noun is a noun-like form which is not counted by prefixing numerals directly; instead, a measure is inserted between the numeral and the noun: rén "person, people", but 'sān-ge-rén "three people", with inserted measure ge. Chinese nouns undergo no changes of form comparable to English man, men, man's, men's.

At noun entries the measure or measures used with the noun (unless this follows automatically from the type of noun) are indicated directly after the code symbol. Whether or not the choice of measure helps to determine the meaning can be determined (if this information is not also given) by looking up the measures.

Nouns participate in nominal expressions as follows:

1. A noun alone:

bīng "soldier(s)"

'shŕ-tew "stone(s)"

'shì-ching "affair(s), matter(s)" lĭ-'bày "week(s)"

chéng "(walled) city"

2. A noun preceded by another noun or by a nominal expression:

jywūn-'gwān "army officer"

chyán-'pyàw-dz "money ticket"="bill" (paper money)

'yí-kwày-chyán-de-chyán-'pyàw-dz "one-dollar bill"

jèy-ge-'tswēn-dz-lĭ-tew "this village's inside"="in this village" (final noun 'lĭ-tew "inside")

3. A noun preceded by an adjective or adjective expression, or by a verb or verb expression:

'dà-rén "adult person, adult people"="adults"

gān-'dì "dry land"

gān-le-de-'dì "dried land"

dzwèy-'hèw-de-shèng-'lì "final victory"

'rúng-yì-dzwò-de-'shì "easy-to-do work" = "work that is easy to do"

dă-dž-'jī "strike-letter machine"="typewriter"

mày-'shū-de-rén "sell-book person"="bookseller"

4. A numeral plus a measure plus a noun:

yí-ge-'rén "a person"

'sān-ge-rén "three people"

'lyăng-kwày-chyán "two dollars"

5. A measure plus a noun:

ge-'rén "a person"

This is equivalent to the above with yī "a, an, one" as numeral, and occurs as an alternate to the latter only after a verb (V, I, RC, K) or A or H.

6. A demonstrative plus a measure plus a noun:

'jèy-ge-rén "this person"

jèy-wăn-'fàn "this bowl of rice"

7. A demonstrative plus a numeral plus a measure plus a noun:

'jèy-yí-ge-rén "this one person"

8. Any of the last four types (4–7) with an adjective or adjective expression, or verb or verb expression, inserted before the noun; any of them with an adjective inserted before a containing measure (Mcont):

yì-wăn-hĕn-hăw-'chĭ-de-'fàn "a bowl of very good rice"

yí-'dà-wăn-'fàn "a big bowl of rice"

Nabstr = Abstract Nouns (See also N)

Abstract nouns do not enter into constructions with measures except with a classifying measure, usually jǔng "kind of, class of, type of":

'nèy-jǔng-nyán-'líng "that kind-of age"="such an age as that"

Ncoll = Collective Nouns (See also N)

A collective noun refers to several discrete things (or people) taken as a unified group. They do not enter into constructions with measures save occasionally with a classifying measure (jǔng "kind of, class of, sort of"), or (with certain ones only) a grouping measure:

'jèy-jǔng-fù-'mǔ "this kind-of parents"="such parents as these"

yí-tàw-jwō-'yǐ "a matching set of tables and chairs"

When a collective noun precedes a verb in a sentence, a summarizing adverb such as dēw or chywán "all, both, altogether, all in all" is usually placed directly before the verb:

wǒ-de-'fù-mǔ 'dēw bú-'dzày-le. "My parents are both dead."

Nmass = Mass Nouns (See also N)

Mass nouns refer to substances which come in a continuous mass:

shwěy "water"

'shŕ-tew "stone"

dyàn-'shyàn "wire"

dì "land"

yán "salt"

chyán "money"

Unit measures used with mass nouns specify some quantity, piece, extension, size-and-shape, of the substance in question. In some cases measures are listed for a mass noun where it is entered in the dictionary; for others the measure that is most apt to be used follows from the type of substance in question. The following list will be useful:

1. With Nmass designating solids of indefinite extent in three dimensions (stone, iron, wood, glass), most commonly Munit kwày "irregular piece or hunk of".
2. With Nmass designating solids of indefinite extent primarily in two dimensions (paper, cloth): kwày as above; jāng "sheet of"; sometimes tyáw "slip or strip of".
3. With Nmass designating solids of indefinite extent primarily in one dimension (rope, string, thread, wire): tyáw for an indefinitely long piece; gēn or gēr for a short piece; sometimes kwěn "a bundle of" (e.g., sticks).
4. With Nmass designating masses composed of tiny solid particles (sand, sugar, salt): lì or lyèr "a grain of"; or by weight or containerful (Mmeas, Mcont).
5. With Nmass designating liquids: dī or dyēr "a drop of"; or by containerful.
6. With Nmass designating surfaces or extents (as surfaces, not solids; thus land, fields): kwày for an indefinite area of, pyàn for "an extent of, an expanse of"; or by precise measurement of area (Mmeas).
7. Nmass designating things which are in a state neither solid nor liquid (jellies, greases, salves, viscous liquids, paraffin, mud) are made to fall within the classifications of solid or liquid. One Munit, however, emphasizes this intermediate state: tān "a gooey, sticky mess of, in the process of melting and spreading out":

yì-tān-chèw-'yéw "a gob of tar melting and spreading out"

But if such a substance is bought and sold, it is often measured by weight or containerful (Mmeas, Mcont).

Npers = Personal Nouns (See also N)

Personal nouns refer to people or kinds of people (but not collectively, in which case the noun is an Ncoll, nor by specific personal name, in which case the noun is an Nunique).

In construction with measures, personal nouns occur with the Munit ge, which carries no meaning at all save to indicate that the individuals are being enumerated as individuals; with the Munit wèy, which indicates the same thing plus a degree of politeness; and with the Munit kěw, when one is concerned with economics or with census.

The NumG (shŕ "ten", and so on) function as grouping measures with personal nouns, but not with any other type of noun: either yì-bǎy-'rén "one hundred people" or yì-bǎy-ge-'rén "one hundred unit people" for "a hundred people", but, with a different type of noun, only yì-bǎy-ge-'wǎn for "a hundred bowls".

Npers form collective nouns (Ncoll) by adding -men: 'péng-yew "friend(s)"; 'péng-yew-men "friends collectively", as, for example, all the friends of a certain person.

NpersT = Personal Nouns Used as Titles (See also N)

These share all the features outlined above for Npers, and, in addition, are used as titles. A form used as a title follows the person's name:

'jāng-shyān-sheng "Mr. Jāng"

'lǐ-jǔ-shí "Chairman Lǐ"

Nplace = Place Nouns (See also N)

Place nouns are not often used with measures; when the contrary is true this is specified at the entry and full details are given.

Place nouns participate in place expressions as follows:

1. Place noun alone:

'lǐ-tew "inside" (of something not mentioned but understood)

2. Place noun preceded by a designation of the object relative to which the place is located:

'wū-dz-lǐ-tew "room's inside"="inside the room"*

In some cases a place noun has a single short form and one or more longer forms; e.g.: lǐ (or li) "inside"; longer forms 'lǐ-tew, 'lǐ-tewr, 'lǐ-byan, 'lǐ-byar, 'lǐ-myan, 'lǐ-myar. When this is the case, the short form is used principally after coverbs of direction (shyàng-'lǐ "towards the inside"), the longer forms elsewhere.

Ntime = Time Nouns (See also N)

A time noun designates a time, absolute or relative, or a period of time. Measures for time nouns, when any are used, are designated at the entries.

A nominal expression ending in a time noun is a time expression.

NumG = Group Numerals

NumU = Unit Numerals

Unit numerals are the morphemes for "one" through "nine" and jǐ "a few; how many?"; group numerals are the morphemes for "ten", "hundred", "thousand", and "ten thousand". Numeral expressions consist of one of these or of expressions compounded from them as follows:

1. Multiples of the group numerals are formed by prefixing the proper unit numerals:

'èr-shŕ "twenty", and so on.

For "ten" one says simply shŕ; but for "hundred", "thousand", and "ten thousand" one says:

yì-'bǎy "one hundred" yì-'chyān "one thousand"

yí-'wàn "one ten thousand"

If "ten" forms the last part of a larger numerical expression, one says yī-'shŕ; thus:

yì-'bǎy-yī-'shŕ "one hundred and ten"

2. Numbers larger than ten thousand are expressed in multiples of wàn "ten thousand", instead of in multiples of a thousand as in English:

'shŕ-wàn "a hundred thousand", and so on.

3. Compound numbers up to 9,999 are formed the same in Chinese as in English, save that Chinese is regular for the 'teen's and the 'ty's:

shŕ-'sān "thirteen"

sān-shr-'sż "thirty-four"

Compound numbers beyond 10,000 are the same save for the comment made in point 2.

4. One or more successive zeros, other than in final position, are expressed by the term líng used once:

yì-'bǎy-líng-'yī "a hundred and one"*

yì-'chyān-líng-'yī "a thousand and one"

5. Either standing alone, or at the end of a compound number in the digits position, two successive unit numerals indicate approximate number:

sż-'wǔ "about four or five"

6. jǐ replaces a unit numeral in the digits position to indicate approximateness:

èr-shr-'jǐ "twenty-odd"

7. An alternative way of expressing compound numbers, particularly in giving dates in the Western calendar, or in reading off figures in Arabic notation, is to read off digit by digit, using líng once for each zero and dyǎn for a decimal point:

'yī 'jyěw-'sż-'sż-'nyán "the year 1944"

'sān-'sż-'wǔ-'dyǎn-'chī-'bā-'jyěw "345.789"

8. There are two words for "two": èr and lyǎng, used as follows:

a. Only èr is used in compound numbers, except that bǎy "hundred" and the two larger group numerals may be preceded by either to indicate "two hundred" and the like.

b. Only èr is used in ordinal expressions (see Preord).

c. lyǎng is otherwise used for just "two" (not "two hundred and two" and the like) with most measures. A few measures permit either lyǎng or èr for just "two"; one requires èr. When èr is permitted or required under these circumstances by a particular measure, that fact is indicated at the entry.

Numeral expressions participate in nominal expressions as follows:

1. Alone. This is confined almost entirely to mathematical statements such as:

'lyèw jyā-'lyèw dé shŕ-'èr. "Six plus six is twelve."

2. A numeral plus a measure:

sān-'shěng "three provinces"

3. A numeral plus a measure plus a noun:

yí-ge-'rén "a person"

4. A demonstrative plus a numeral plus a measure:

'jèy-yí-ge "this one"

5. A demonstrative plus a numeral plus a measure plus a noun:

jèy-'yí-ge-rén "this one person"

Nunique = Unique Nouns (See also N)

Unique nouns refer to things of which there is only one: proper names of people and places, and a few words such as tyān "sky, heaven". Unique nouns, as such, are not used in construction with measures. But since two people or two places may have the same proper name, that name is sometimes used as an ordinary personal noun or unit noun to state just that fact:

yěw 'lyǎng-ge-chúng-'chìng. "There are two Chung-kings." (if there were)

This is not done with a single-syllable surname of a person. There the fact has to be stated in a different way:

yěw 'lyǎng-ge-shìng-'jāng-de-rén. "There are two people named Jāng."

This second method is possible with all unique nouns. A unique noun is a definite nominal expression.

Nunit = Unit Nouns (See also N)

Unit nouns refer to discrete objects other than people (dog, cow, horse, bowl, cup, book, and the like). The unit measure or unit measures used with each unit noun are indicated at the entry, since there is not much chance of predicting accurately what measure will be used. However, the use of a particular unit measure with a particular unit noun often refers to some characteristic feature of the thing named by the noun: thus tools and instruments which one grasps in the hand for use (scissors, knives, rakes, fans) often take the Munit bǎ, which turns on just this feature of the objects named by the nouns.

NunitC = Unit Nouns Used as Containing Measures (See also N)

An NunitC shares the characteristics outlined above for Nunit; in addition, being the name of an object which might on occasion function as a container for something else, it functions as an Mcont. Thus yí-ge-'wǎn "a bowl", with wǎn as a noun and the measure ge, but yì-wǎn-'fàn "a bowl of rice", with wǎn as a containing measure and the noun fàn.

postV = Postverbs

The second of the two constituents of an RC is called a postverb. When in the discussion of a form the phrase "As postV:" occurs, it indicates that the following subentries are, or that the following sentences include, resultative compounds with the head entry functioning as a postverb. If the head entry is an A or I, the RC are of type one or two; if the head entry is a V, the RC are of type three or four.

Preord = Ordinal Prefix

An ordinal prefix is an element prefixed to an expression containing a numeral to give it ordinal meaning ("first", "second", and so on). There are only a few Preord; the chief one is dì-. An ordinal prefix enters into nominal expressions as follows:

1. Preord plus numeral (rare):

   dì-'yī "in the first place, point one"

2. Preord plus numeral plus measure:

   dì-'chī-shr-chī-'shī "the seventy-seventh division"

3. Preord plus numeral plus measure plus noun:

   'téw-yí-ge-rén "the first person" (of those in a line, for example)

   'téw-lyǎng-ge-rén "the first two people"

If a particular thing is regularly numbered ordinally, the ordinal prefix is often omitted; thus with numbered streets in a city:

'sān-jyē "third street"

A number of nouns (of which jyē "street" is one) require no measure in this case, functioning themselves as measures only in such ordinal constructions.

Ordinal expressions are definite.

Pron = Pronouns

Pronouns are the words for "I, you, he", etc., and for "who". Nominal expressions beginning in a pronoun are definite. Pronouns participate in nominal expressions as follows:

1. A pronoun alone:

   wǒ "I, me"

2. A pronoun (with or without added de) plus almost any nominal expression not itself consisting of, or starting with, a pronoun:

   wǒ-de-'chyán "my money"

   wǒ-'shěw-li "in my hand"

de is used in this case always with shwéy or shéy "who"; it is optionally omitted with the others before terms designating body parts or relatives:

wǒ-'shěw "my hand"

wǒ-'fù-chin "my father"

RC = Resultative Compounds

Resultative compounds are verb compounds having the following special characteristics:

1. Of the two negative adverbs, bū "don't, doesn't, won't" and méy "haven't, hasn't, didn't", only the latter is used before an RC with any degree of freedom. bū is sometimes used in the meaning of "purposely not" do such-and-such:

   nǐ 'bú-dzwò-'wán bù-gěy-'chyán. "If you purposely fail to finish the job you won't get any money."

2. Most RC have a simple form and two potential forms, made by inserting de and bu, respectively, between the main verb and the postverb of the simple form:

dǎ-ˈhwày "strike something so that it breaks"

Potential forms:

dǎ-de-ˈhwày "be able to break by striking" dǎ-bu-ˈhwày "be unable to break by striking"

The simple form describes a situation in which the action designated by the main verb results in the action or state designated by the postverb; the potential forms specify that the action or state specified by the postverb can, or cannot, be brought about by the action designated by the main verb.

Exceptions: RC with postverb dzày "in, at, on" or gěy "to, for" (a person) have no potential forms; a few others also have no potential forms, and this is indicated for these few others at the entries. Some RC have only the potential forms; this is indicated by citing the RC with bu inserted and defining accordingly. This bu is ignored in alphabetization. In some cases where both simple and potential forms exist, there is some unexpected change of meaning; in such cases both are given with their meanings.

RC1 = Resultative Compounds, Type One

An RC1 has an I or A as main verb and another I or A as postverb.

1. In simple form. An RC1 as nucleus of a sentence may be accompanied by a nominal referent in the function of actor; an actor placed after the RC1 is indefinite and must be indefinite in form; an actor placed before the verb is definite regardless of its form:

ˈpǎw-láy-le hěn-ˈdwō-de-jǐng-ˈchá. "A lot of policemen came running up."

nèy-ge-ˈrén jyèw ˈpǎw-láy-le. "The man at once came running up."

A preposed actor not definite in form can be rendered indefinite by prefixing yěw:

yěw hěn-ˈdwō-de-jǐng-ˈchá ˈpǎw-láy-le. "A lot of policemen came running up."

2. In potential forms. An actor is used as with the simple form, but the actor is always definite, before the verb:

wǒ ˈjàn-bu-chǐ-ˈláy. "I can't stand up."

RC2 = Resultative Compounds, Type Two

An RC2 has a V as main verb and an I or A as postverb. There are two subtypes:

1. Subtype One. These are causatives to the underlying I or A used as postverbs: húng (A) "red":

nùng-ˈhúng "to make red"
tú-ˈhúng "to paint red"

The possible combinations are endless; only a sampling of those most apt to be heard are given at entries.

a. Subtype One in Simple Form. As sentence nucleus, an RC2 of subtype one may take two nominal referents: an agent and a goal. The agent precedes the RC2; the goal is most frequently placed between the agent and the verb, marked by preposed coverb bǎ, but may on occasion be placed either first in the sentence, for emphasis, or after the RC2 (the last being the most rare):

tā bǎ nèy-ge-ˈwǎn dǎ-ˈswèy-le. "He broke that bowl."

ˈnèy-ge-wǎn tā háy méy-dǎ-ˈswèy. "(But) he hasn't broken that bowl yet."

The relative emphasis on agent and goal may be reversed by beginning the sentence with the latter and marking the former with preposed coverb jyàw or bèy:

ˈjàng-peng jyàw-ˈfēng gwā-ˈdǎw-le. "The tents were blown down by the wind."

It is quite generally the custom to use RC2 of subtype two in simple form only with added le or with preposed méy.

b. Subtype One in Potential Forms. Both agent and goal precede the verb; the goal is apt to come first, in emphatic position, and the agent is often omitted:

2. Subtype Two. The remainder of RC2 fall in this subtype; the main verb, rather than the postverb, is the component of chief importance, the postverb often indicating only successful completion:

kàn "to look at"
ˈkàn-jyàn "to see"

a. Subtype Two in Simple Form. As sentence nucleus, this subtype calls for an actor and a percept rather than an agent and a goal; the percept is limited to emphatic position at the beginning of the sentence or to position after the verb:

wǒ háy méy-ˈkàn-jyàn ta. "I haven't seen him yet."

tā-de-ˈpéng-yew wǒ háy méy-ˈkàn-jyàn. "His friend, though, I haven't yet seen."

b. Subtype Two in Potential Forms. The positions for actor and percept are as with the simple form:

wǒ kàn-bu-ˈjyàn ˈdǐ-shyà-nèy-ge-ˈdż. "It's the character below it that I can't see."

RC3 = Resultative Compounds, Type Three

RC3 have an I (rarely an A) as main verb, and a V (one of a relatively small number) as postverb.

1. In Simple Form. Two nominal referents occur; an actor, before the RC3, and a terminus after the RC3. The terminus designates a place, point, position, or time which is reached (dàw, dzày), or passed or exceeded (gwò), or a resulting state (chéng):

tā 'pǎw-dàw 'fáng-dz-li chywù-le. "He ran into the house."

tā 'pǎw-gwò 'jyē láy-le. "He ran across the street."

wǒ-men yì-'tyān tsúng 'dzǎw-chen máng-dàw 'wǎn-shang. "We're busy all day from morning to night."

2. In Potential Forms. These are relatively rare. The terminus may come in initial emphatic position:

'jèy-tyáw-hé nǐ 'fù-bu-gwò-'chywù. "You can't swim across this river."

RC4 = Resultative Compounds, Type Four

RC4 have a V as main verb and another V (one of a limited set) as postverb. Those with gěy as postverb are treated separately.

1. In Simple Form. There are potentially three nominal referents: agent, goal, and terminus. The agent and goal come before the RC4, the terminus after. The arrangement before the verb may be either agent bǎ goal or goal jyàw (or bèy) agent. The terminus indicates a place, point, or position reached or passed, or resulting state:

chǐng-ni bǎ-'yān ná-dàw 'jèr-lay. "Please bring the cigarettes over here."

'jàng-peng jyàw-'fēng 'gwā-dàw hé-'nèy-byar chywù-le. "The tents were blown to the other side of the river by the wind."

With agent omitted:

'jàng-peng dēw gěy gwā-dàw hé-'nèy-byar chywù-lė. "The tents were all blown to the other side of the river."

The goal is not omitted, nor is the terminus. With terminus indicating a resulting state:

bǎ tyě-'sz 'wān-chéng yí-ge-'chywār. "Bend the wire into a circle."

2. In Potential Forms. These are rare with RC4; the nominal referents are as with the simple form:

'nèy-ge-dūng-shi tā 'ná-bu-dàw nèr jyèw hwèy 'hwày-de. "That thing is apt to break before he can get it there."

3. With Postverb gěy in Simple Form. The nominal referents are agent, goal, and recipient: the recipient follows the RC4; the agent comes before the RC4; the goal comes either at the beginning for emphasis, after bǎ directly before the RC4, or after the recipient:

chǐng-ni bǎ-'yān dì-gey wo. "Please pass me the cigarettes."

tā 'jyè-gey wo yí-kwày-'chyán. "He loaned me a dollar."

V = Transitive Verbs

With a V as nucleus of a sentence, the nominal referents include an actor (omitted on occasion) and a goal, a percept, or a terminus (only one of these three). The goal or percept may likewise be omitted on occasion.

The actor precedes the verb. With actor only:

'wǒ kāy. "I'll drive."

tā háy méy-'dàw-ne. "He hasn't arrived yet."

With actor understood (as in answering a question "Where is he?"):

háy méy-'dàw. "Hasn't gotten here yet."

A percept designates a person, object, or situation towards which the action denoted by the verb is directed, but which is not, as the result of that action, altered in position or structure. The percept is placed either at the beginning of the sentence (for emphasis) or after the verb:

kàn 'nèy-ge-rén. "Take a look at that fellow."

tā 'cháng-cháng shyǎng-'nǐ. "He's always thinking about you."

'tā wǒ 'jyàn-gwo, tā-'tày-tay wǒ háy méy-'jyàn-gwo. "I've met him, but I haven't yet met his wife."

A goal designates a person, object, or situation on which the action denoted by the verb operates and which that action alters in position or structure. A goal is placed in either of the positions in which a percept is placed, or is placed directly before the verb with preposed bǎ.

chǐng-ni bǎ jèy-bǎ-'fǔ-dz 'dž-shì 'kàn-yi-kàn, 'dzày shwō. "Please wait until you've examined this axe carefully."

Here the verb is kàn "to look at" as in the first example of percept; but here the meaning is that the thing looked at is to be handled, turned around, manipulated, and so forth, in the process.

A terminus designates arrived-at point or resultant state. A terminus is normally after the V:

tā 'shéme-shŕ-hew ké-yi 'dàw-jèr? "When can he get here?"

tā háy méy-chéng-'dīng-ne. "He hasn't become an adult yet."

The V which are used with a terminus are generally those which are used as postverbs in RC3 and RC4, calling there also for a terminus.

V2 = Transitive Verbs Followed by Two Nominal Forms

A V2 is preceded by an actor (sometimes omitted) and followed by two nominal referents: recipient and goal:

tā 'gěy-le wo 'yí-kwày-chyán. "He gave me a dollar."

tā 'sùng-le wo yì-tyáw-'tǎn-dz. "He sent me a blanket." (as a gift)

The goal may come in emphatic position at the beginning of the sentence:

'nèy-tyáw-'tǎn-dz wǒ 'bù-néng 'gěy-ni. "I can't let you have that particular blanket."

VN1 = Verb-Noun Combination, Type One

A VN1 is a combination of verb and goal (or percept or terminus; one cannot distinguish them) which is "frozen"—having special meaning not predictable from the meaning of the verb and the noun, and not freely separable (compare VN2). Thus dzěw-bèy-'ywùn "to pass through a period of ill luck, to get bad breaks":

tā shyàn-dzày dzěw bèy-'ywùn-ne. "He's meeting up with a good deal of bad luck right now."

A VN1, as it functions in a sentence (since it takes only an actor, containing within itself any other possible nominal referent), works like either an I or an A. Unless there is clear indication at an entry that a particular VN1 works like an A, it is to be taken as working like an I.

VN2 = Verb-Noun Combination, Type Two

A VN2 is a combination of verb and goal (or percept or terminus) which has a meaning not predictable from the meanings of the parts, but the parts of which can be separated, or even come in reverse order in the sentence, without losing that special meaning. Thus dzwò-'shèw is "to celebrate the birthday of an older person":

tā 'jīn-nyan dzwò 'wǔ-shr-wǔ-'swèy-de-'shèw. "He celebrates his fifty-fifth birthday this year."

VN3 = Verb-Noun Combination, Type Three

A VN3 operates as does a VN2, but in addition may function as a noun with the meaning "N which has been V'ed". Thus chǎw-'fàn is "to fry rice" or "fried rice".

Vpred = Verbs Used Before a Nuclear Verb

A Vpred is placed before another verb (V, I, RC; rarely A); the second verb is the nucleus, and the various nominal referents are arranged accordingly:

wǒ hěn 'ywàn-yi chywù. "I'm quite anxious to go."

wǒ děy 'dzěw-le. "I've got to leave now."

wǒ yàw chī-'fàn. "I'm going to eat."

Vsent = Verbs Followed by an Entire Sentence

A Vsent is preceded by an actor (unless actor is understood from context), and is followed by an entire sentence with its own nucleus, its own actor, etc.:

wǒ 'chǐng-ni chī-'fàn. "I'm inviting you to dinner."

shéy jyàw-ni 'chywù-de? "Who told you to go?"

tā shwō tā bú-'ywàn-yi chywù. "He said he doesn't want to go."

F. CHARACTERS

1. Since this is a dictionary of spoken Chinese, no effort has been made to see that the Chinese-English side includes the characters which are most apt to occur in any particular variety of written Chinese. However, each entry in the Chinese-English side is preceded by the characters with which the particular form is normally written, and the characters which so occur are listed in the Character Index which follows the Chinese-English side.

2. Chinese characters represent an essentially different type of writing system from the systems of western European languages and of English. The unit symbols of the latter are letters; a letter represents a recurrent sound of the spoken language, and by stringing letters out in the same order in which the sounds occur in an utterance, that utterance is portrayed. Chinese characters, in contrast to this, represent not sounds but morphemes of the spoken language (see Section E, Subsection 1). Since any utterance consists of a string of morphemes, the proper characters strung out in the proper order can similarly portray the utterance. Such a system obviously requires a much larger number of unit symbols, since any language has a larger number of morphemes than it has sounds.

The above statement has to be modified slightly: a single Chinese character is used to represent either a morpheme or a syllable, whichever is smaller. Thus to the morpheme bīng "soldier", which is also one syllable, corresponds a single character; to the morpheme bīng "ice" (a different morpheme from that for soldier although it sounds the same) corresponds another single character; to the morpheme 'bwō-li "glass", which is two syllables, corresponds a sequence of two characters, one representing each of the syllables of the morpheme; and to the syllable hwàr "picture", which is two morphemes, hwà "to depict" plus a fused element -r, corresponds a sequence of two characters, one representing each morpheme.

It is also true that sometimes the same character is used to write things which strike one as being quite unrelated in meaning, not by any stretch of the imagination cases of a single morpheme. Thus the same character is used to write the morpheme dūng "east" and the first syllable of the two-syllable morpheme 'dūng-shi "thing". Chinese writing is no more capricious in this, however, than is English writing in using the same letter or combination of letters for distinct sounds (th for the distinct sounds of thin and this, for example).

3. Characters are by no means completely distinct from each other in form. Many characters representing morphemes with similar meanings have smaller visual parts in common; many characters representing morphemes with identical or similar sound have smaller visual parts in common. These interrelationships on a level lower than that of characters as wholes, however, do not parallel in any systematic way similar relationships between the morphemes represented.

The Chinese have made use of these partial similarities to the eye for one important purpose: the establishment of some order in which characters can be listed, comparable to arbitrary alphabetical order in English and other alphabetical writing systems. The most common of these is as follows: Each character consists of a recurrent partial called a radical, and various added figures. The radicals, 214 in number, are arranged in groups depending on the number of strokes used in drawing them, and, within each group, in an arbitrarily fixed sequence. Each character is then grouped under the radical which it contains, and a character calling for a larger number of strokes in addition to those used for the radical follows one which calls for a smaller number of strokes in addition to the radical. Where this number of added strokes is the same for several characters, the order is once again arbitrary, but usually follows that found in a certain very large dictionary of characters published in the eighteenth century. Whether this established order is followed in such cases or not, the group of characters whose ordering would have to be determined on such an arbitrary principle is generally so small that for purposes of finding a particular one any order is satisfactory.

In the Character Index of this dictionary the characters which occur in the Chinese-English side are ordered in this way. After each is given the pronunciation, or pronunciations, of the morpheme (or morphemes) which that character is used to represent. Since the body of the Chinese-English side is alphabetized according to pronunciation, this serves as a convenient means of cross reference.

4. The specific nature of the Chinese writing system has led to the development of a number of specialized literary styles, involving sequences of morphemes which do not occur in the spoken language itself, morphemes used with shades of meaning they do not have in the spoken language, or even morphemes no longer used in the spoken language. Some of the typical phrases of one or another literary style, however, are often quoted in ordinary speech, particularly, but not exclusively, by educated Chinese. Some of these are important enough to require inclusion in the present dictionary, small though it is.

Entries on the Chinese-English side marked literary quotation are expressions of this kind, borrowed from the literary (written) language but apt to be quoted.

Entries marked a bit literary are expressions not necessarily used by a speaker of Chinese as literary quotations in the above sense, but still likely to be heard mainly from the lips of an educated Chinese.

Entries marked literary are expressions, or morphemes, not ordinarily occurring in speech at all, save sometimes in designations of official government agencies and the like.

PART II

CHINESE–ENGLISH

NOTES ON THE USE OF THE CHINESE–ENGLISH SIDE

Alphabetical Order. Single syllables are arranged in straight alphabetical order. Syllables differing only in tone are arranged in the following manner: ju (no tone), jū, jú, jǔ, jù.

Entries containing more than one syllable are arranged under those of one syllable, or in comparable order when the single-syllable entry is lacking. Thus jǔ-'yì precedes jù-'dzwò because jǔ precedes jù.

The forms bū "not" and yī "one" are ignored in the alphabetization save in a few cases where those forms themselves are of prime importance. Thus kàn-bu-'jyàn would be alphabetized as though the second syllable were not there.

Characters. The characters for an entry precede the entry.

Typefaces. Chinese material is in boldface. English equivalents and definitions are in lightface. Explanation and comment are in italics.

Code Symbols. The italicized abbreviations in parentheses after most entries and some subentries are code symbols referring to Section E, Subsection 6, of the Introduction.

Asterisk. An asterisk (*) before an entry indicates that it is a bound morpheme (see Section E, Subsection 1, of the Introduction).

Degree Sign. The degree sign (°) is used in Chinese or English sentences as follows: "He isn't °coming here any more. or °going to come here again." Here the degree sign indicates that both "He isn't coming here any more." and "He isn't going to come here again." are acceptable versions.

have all been bombed to pieces. ‖tā gěy-ni shēw-'tyáw-le-ma? Did he give you a receipt? ‖'jǐ-tyān shǐ-'wán-le? How many days will it take before they have all been washed? (here le indicates completion before a certain future time). ‖wǒ 'shŕ-le yì-gwǎn-dz̀-láy-shwěy-'bǐ. I found a fountain pen. ‖wǒ 'dzwó-tyan-'wǎn-shang kàn-le 'lyǎng-ge-dyàn-'yěngr. I saw two movies last night.

(2) With an active predicate, le comes immediately after the verb or at the end of the sentence (except for -ma, -ne, méy-yew, etc.). With the last example above compare: ‖wǒ 'dzwó-tyan-'wǎn-shang kàn dyàn-'yěngr-le. I went to the movies last night. Compare also the following pairs: ‖wǒ 'dzwó-tyan nyàn-le 'sān-běn-shū. I read three books yesterday. ‖wǒ 'dzwó-tyan nyàn-'shū-le. I studied yesterday. ‖wǒ 'dzwó-tyan chŕ-le hěn-dwō-'fàn. I ate a lot of food yesterday. ‖nǐ chŕ-'fàn-le méy-yew? Have you eaten? Position at end of sentence emphasizes the whole event; position after the verb emphasizes what follows, not the action expressed by the verb.

(3) RC1 and RC2 with an adjective as postV often require le, unless méy precedes: ‖bǎ-'shěw tsā-'gān-le. Wipe your hands (until they have become) dry.

(4) With a stative predicate; that is, A, or RC in potential form, or many Vpred, or some A also used as V when so used, or yěw or méy (before a noun); indicates that the state in question has already started to exist and is therefore in existence at the moment of speaking or point of time reference: ‖tā 'yǐ-jing 'hǎw-le. He's already recovered now. ‖wǒ bù-'téw-téng-le. My headache has stopped. ‖'nèy-ge-rén 'yǐ-jing yěw-'chyán-le. That man is (already) rich. ‖wǒ 'méy-yew chyán-le. I'm out of money. ‖wǒm děy 'dzěw-le. We must go. (5) With a noun predicate the meaning is similar to the last: ‖tā 'jīn-nyan jǐ-'swèy-le? How old is he (literally has he become) this year? ‖tā 'jīn-nyan 'lyèw-swèy-le. He's six this year. ‖shŕ-dyǎn-'bàn-le. It's ten-thirty.

(6) When a verb is followed by an expression of duration or frequency, le is used only after the verb, or there and also after the expression of duration or frequency: ‖wǒ-men dzày chúng-'chìng jù-le 'sān-nyán. We stayed in Chungking three years. ‖wǒ-men dzày chúng-'chìng jù-le 'sān-nyán-le. We've been in Chungking for three years now.

(7) In stating a time or condition under which something happens, le contrasts with je: ‖wǒm 'chŕ-le 'fàn jyèw kàn-'shū. After we've eaten we'll study. ‖wǒm chŕ-je 'fàn bú-kàn-'shū. We don't study while eating.

(8) le contrasts with de; le emphasizes the thing done, de emphasizes the time at which done: ‖tā dàw-'nǎr chywù-le? tā kàn tā-'mǔ-chin chywù-le. Where did she go? She went to see her mother. ‖'shémé-shŕ-hew chywù-de? 'chyán-tyan chywù-de. When did she go? She went the day before yesterday. ‖tā chywù-nyan dàw 'jūng-gwo chywù-le. He went to China last year (emphasis on China). but ‖tā 'chywù-nyan dàw jūng-gwo chywù-de. It was last year that he went to China (emphasis on last year).

(9) For contrast with gwo see gwo.

(10) Compare the following: gān-'dì dry land: 'gān-le-de-'dì dried land, land that has dried off; 'hǎw-rén a good guy or a healthy guy: 'hǎw-le-de-'rén one who has recovered from illness. Similar contrast with or without -le-de between any adjective used before a noun and the noun; the de is automatic when the element before the noun becomes longer than one syllable.

PART III

CHARACTER INDEX

NOTE

The following index covers (1) all those characters which appear alone or as the first character of an expression of several characters in the Chinese-English side of the dictionary; (2) all those characters which are virtually interchangeable with one of those covered by (1).

The arrangement is in five columns. In the first column appears a number in decimal form. The part of the number before the decimal point indicates the radical number, and the part after the decimal point indicates the number of added strokes. In the second column appears the character itself. In the third column appears the pronunciation (or pronunciations) of that character, in transcription. This serves as a cross reference to the proper entry or entries in the Chinese-English side, where the arrangement is alphabetical by transcription. The fourth and fifth columns are usually blank, but when there are other characters virtually interchangeable with the one being listed, they appear in the fifth column, and the proper index number is listed in the fourth column. An exception to this method of cross reference is made when two virtually interchangeable characters occur one immediately below the other; in this case there is a brace after the second column and the pronunciation or pronunciations of the two are given but once.

PART IV

ENGLISH–CHINESE

NOTES ON THE USE OF THE ENGLISH–CHINESE SIDE

Alphabetical Order. The alphabetical order is absolute. Main entries consisting of two words are alphabetized as though the letters formed a single word with no intervening space; e.g., CAN, CANDY, and CAN OPENER would follow each other in that order.

Typefaces. English material is in boldface. Chinese definitions and equivalents are in lightface. Explanation and comment are in italics.

Degree Sign. The degree sign (°) is used in either Chinese or English sentences in the following manner: "He isn't °coming here any more. or °going to come here again." Here the degree sign indicates that both "He isn't coming here any more." and "He isn't going to come here again." are acceptable versions.

A

A (AN). Where English has a or an before a noun specifying merely an indefinite example of the item named by the noun, Chinese has sometimes the unmodified noun, sometimes the noun preceded by yī plus a measure; after a verb, the measure alone may replace the yī-plus-measure combination.* ‖Is there a shoe store near here? (jèr-)'fù-jìn yǒw shyé-'pù-ma? ‖That's a female cat. nà-shr̀ 'mǔ-māw. ‖This is a book. jè-shr̀ 'shū. ‖A lion is heavier than a lioness. 'gūng-shr̄-dz bǐ 'mǔ-shr̄-dz 'jùng. ‖Have you an envelope? (nǐ) 'yěw-méy-yew (yí-ge-)shìn-'fēngr? ‖Give me a book to read. gěy-wo yì-běr-'shū kàn. ‖She bought a female cat. tā 'mǎy-le yì-jr̄-'mǔ-māw. ‖A Mohammedan may have four wives. yí-ge-'hwéy-hwey kě-yi chywǔ 'sz̀-ge-tày-tay. ‖A lion escaped from the zoo. yěw yì-jr̄-'shr̄-dz tsúng dùng-wu-'ywán 'pǎw-chu-lay-le. ‖He's a good man. tā-shr̀ ge-'hǎw-rén.

(Each, per) shown by order of sentence elements, sometimes with each měy plus a measure. ‖These eggs are fifty cents a dozen. is expressed as These eggs are fifty cents one dozen. jèy-shyē-jī-'dzěr shr̀ 'wǔ-máw-chyán yì-'dá. or as These eggs each dozen fifty cents. jèy-shyē-jī-'dzěr 'měy-yì-dá 'wǔ-máw-chyán. ‖These books are three for a dollar. jèy-shyē-'shū °shr̀ 'yí-kwày-chyán 'sān-běr. or °měy-'sān-běr 'yí-kwày-chyán.
